SUPREME COURT VIEW SCORED BY BUCKLEY

Calls Bar to Parochial School Aid 'Religious Repression'

By FRANK LYNN
Special to The New York Times

SYRACUSE, Sept. 24—In a vigorous criticism of the United States Supreme Court, Senator James L. Buckley charged today that the Court's decisions barring most parochial school aid were in effect "religious repression."

Speaking at a meeting of the American Association of Christian Schools, the Senator said that the Court "in the area of religious education is perversely unconcerned about the rights of parents, the preservation of individual liberty, the protection of personal conscience and the continuation of pluralism in American society."

"Religious repression has come full circle," the Conservative-Republican Senator told some 500 parochial school educators, primarily Protestants, in what appeared to be a major appeal for the support in his re-election campaign by Roman Catholic and other parochial school advocates.

It could also revive the parochial school aid question as a major issue in the Senate campaign, in which the Democratic challenger, Daniel P. Moynihan, is also seeking the support of Catholic voters—potentially the swing vote in the election.

The Senator, a Roman Catholic, knows first hand the problems of private schools. Two of his children attend an Episcopal academy in Washington while four others attend state colleges in Virginia and Colorado, and Williams College in Massachusets.

SENATE UNIT MOVES TO PROHIBIT MISSILES FOR SAUDI ARABIANS

Committee Votes 8 to 6 Against 650 TV-Guided Mavericks—McGovern Assails Step

By JOHN W. FINNEY
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24—The Senate Foreign Relations Committee, in an unexpected setback to the Administration's Middle East policy, voted 8 to 6 today to block the sale to Saudi Arabia of 650 air-to-surface Maverick missiles.

Administration officials, concerned about the impact of the committee's vote upon relations with Saudi Arabia, immediately expressed the hope that Congress would adjourn before the Senate and House could approve a resolution blocking the sale of the advanced television-guided missiles.

Reflecting the Administration's position, Senator George McGovern, Democrat of South Dakota who is chairman of the committee's Middle East subcommittee, described the committee's action as "a political mistake" that is "going to complicate our relations in trying to act as an honest broker in the Middle East."

Iranian Purchases Planned

The move to bar the sale of Mavericks to the Saudis came at the time of a disclosure that Iran had expressed its "firm intention" to the Defense Department to buy 250 of the Navy's future F-18 fighters, in addition to the 80 F-14 interceptors and the 160 F-18 fighters it has already ordered from the United States. The F-18 is still in the design stage.

The Administration thought it had worked out a compromise to avoid a fight in Congress over the proposed sale of the Maverick missiles to Saudi Arabia. In negotiations with Senator Hubert H. Humphrey, Democrat of Minnesota, and Senator Jacob K. Javits, the New York Republican, the Administration lowered the number of missiles to be sold to Saudi Arabia from 1,500 to 650.

But Senator Clifford P. Case of New Jersey, the ranking Republican on the committee, noted that he had not been a party in the negotiations or in "compromise." With support from the pro-Israel lobby, whose representative was patrolling the corridor outside the committee room, Senator Case pressed for an immediate vote on his resolution disapproving the Maverick sale.

Telegram Sent to Kissinger

In vain, Senator Javits argued for a delay in the vote until the committee could hear from Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger upon his return late today from his African trip. The committee yesterday had sent a telegram to Mr. Kissinger, then in London asking, for his views on the Case resolution, but a State Department aide said the telegram apparently had not been relayed by the staff to the Secretary of State.

The initial vote on the Case resolution was 6 to 6. But then Senator Humphrey, who said he no longer felt bound by the compromise, voted for the resolution and cast the proxy vote of Senator Gale W. McGee, Democrat of Wyoming, in favor of the resolution.

Senator Javits, normally a supporter of Israel, voted against the resolution on the ground that he was still bound by the compromise worked out with President Ford. While supplying the missiles

Kissinger Cautions That Decision By Rhodesia Is 'Only the Beginning'

By BERNARD GWERTZMAN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24—Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger welcomed the Rhodesian Prime Minister's acceptance today of the British-American formula for transition to black majority rule but cautioned that this was "only the beginning" since problems could still arise if whites and blacks failed to carry it out.

Upon his arrival late this afternoon at Andrews Air Force Base after his 11-day, 25,000-mile African mission, Mr. Kissinger, the chief mediator between whites and blacks in southern Africa, said the announcement by Prime Minister Ian D. Smith was "an encouraging development."

"There is now a greater chance to avert violence, recrimination and outside intervention in southern Africa," he said. But he warned that "the steps that have been taken are only the beginning of a process."

Praise From the President

"Its outcome and success can only be determined by the peoples and leaders of that country and of the African continent," the Secretary said.

President Ford, in a statement issued at the White House, praised all those who had played a role in helping Mr. Kissinger achieve his goals during the trip. He praised the efforts of Prime Minister John Vorster of South Africa, Prime Minister James Callaghan of Britain and the "indispensable contributions" made by "various African Presidents." The President said that Mr. Smith's acceptance of the plan "can head off an escalating conflict and should produce negotiations which can bring southern Africa closer to peace."

"The road is now open for an African solution to an African problem—free of outside intervention, violence and bitterness," Mr. Ford declared.

Heard News Aboard Plane

Before leaving London for Washington this morning, Mr. Kissinger and Foreign Secretary Anthony Crosland agreed that the first steps toward majority rule should begin in a few weeks. They were concerned that the momentum begun today not be lost and that blacks and whites in Rhodesia move as quickly as possible toward majority rule to prevent possible Soviet-backed interference in their affairs.

At a joint news conference at the American Embassy before Mr. Kissinger's departure, Mr. Crosland said, "The last thing we want is a long delay."

Police in New York Protest Over Shifts

By PRANAY GUPTE

Thousands of off-duty police officers, protesting against new work schedules and deferred raises, picketed yesterday at nearly all of New York City's 73 station houses while representatives of the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association sought unsuccessfully, to persuade Mayor Beame to agree to their demands.

The picketing was peaceful and it appeared to have no major impact on police operations.

In a development with some implications for police negotiations, District Council 37 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, which represents 120,000 workers, carried out a pledge by agreeing to $15 million in fringe and pay cuts, including a 10 percent salary reduction for new city workers. Feared End of All Support—Says the Accord Will End Fighting and Sanctions

By MICHAEL T. KAUFMAN
Special to The New York Times

SALISBURY, Rhodesia, Sept. 24—Prime Minister Ian D. Smith told the Rhodesian people tonight that he had accepted Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's proposal calling for an immediate biracial temporary government and for black majority rule within two years.

Mr. Smith, who broke Rhodesia's colonial ties to Britain nearly 11 years ago rather than accept Britain's insistence on political rights for blacks, made it clear in his television address that he was left with little choice but acceptance after his meeting in Pretoria last weekend with Mr. Kissinger and Prime Minister John Vorster of South Africa.

"It was made abundantly clear to me," said the 56-year-old Prime Minister, "that as long as the present circumstances in Rhodesia prevailed, we could expect no help or support of any kind from the free world. On the contrary, the pressures on us from the free world would continue to mount."

Culmination of Initiative

The speech, a proud capitulation to forces no longer under Mr. Smith's control, represented the culmination of a diplomatic initiative in Africa started in the spring by Mr. Kissinger. The Secretary had been stunned by Soviet and Cuban success in Angola and conceded that he had ignored this continent in earlier policy considerations.

In that initiative Mr. Kissinger had developed close contact with the leaders of Rhodesia's black African neighbor states and with Prime Minister Vorster. He worked through them to put pressure on Rhodesia's black nationalists and the Smith Government to accept a formula that might ward off a widening of the racial war in southern Africa.

Aspects of Plan Described

Mr. Smith, his voice firm but his eyes continually on the speech he read, described the key aspects of the plan proposed to him by Mr. Kissinger:

¶Rhodesia agrees to majority rule within two years.

¶Representatives of the Rhodesian Government are to meet immediately with black leaders to form a biracial temporary government composed of a council of state and a council of ministers that will govern until majority rule is achieved through a new constitution and elections. The head of the council of ministers is to be a black and the group is to have a black majority.

¶With the establishment of the temporary government economic sanctions against Rhodesia will be lifted and the guerrilla war mounted by nationalist factions will end.

¶An internationally financed trust fund will be established outside the country to organize development and investment programs in Rhodesia.

Britain will enact certain legislation, presumably ending the outlaw status Rhodesia has held since Mr. Smith proclaimed independence without approval of the mother country.

Prime Minister Smith said that Mr. Kissinger had assured him "that we share a common aim and purpose, namely to keep Rhodesia in the free world and to keep it free from Communist penetration."

In the speech Mr. Smith said that the next stage would be "a meeting beween

Patricia Hearst Gets 7 Years on Robbery Charges

By LACEY FOSBURGH
Special to The New York Times

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 24—Patricia Campbell Hearst was sentenced to seven years in prison this afternoon on the combined charges of armed robbery and use of a firearm to commit a felony.

The 22-year-old defendant, a kidnapping victim who later joined forces with her revolutionary abductors, had faced a maximum of 35 years in prison, but the sentence, which followed a long and sentimental appeal for leniency and even probation, was a good deal more severe than most legal observers expected.

It was even more severe than the penalty the Government had requested in court this morning. Significantly, in the past, United States Attorney James L. Browning Jr. has said he considered six years an "appropriate" sentence. Today, in brief, perfunctory remarks, he suggested only that the young woman be sentenced to "some further time" in Federal custody.

In a stern voice, however, United States District Court Judge William H. Orrick Jr. declared, "Miss Hearst, the violent nature of your conduct cannot be condoned. Violence is unacceptable and will not be tolerated."

The Hearst family and their lawyers were visibly shocked by the sentence, but, as usual, they were not given to drama or emotion. Randolph A. Hearst, the young woman's father, seated in the front row, frowned deeply and F. Lee Bailey, the chief defense attorney, allowed his jaw to drop open. Miss Hearst, appearing thinner and even more wan than usual, did not move. Wearing a long green dress, she stood facing the judge, nodding once at his words.

Immediately after the proceedings the defense filed a notice of appeal with the court as well as a motion for bail pending appeal.

In the sentencing process, Miss Hearst was treated as an adult prisoner rather than a so-called youthful offender. This means that under the conditions of the sentence she is not eligible for consideration of parole for 16 months.

In treating her this way, Judge Orrick specifically rejected the one legal option that a number of authorities, including Mr. Browning, had anticipated. The prosecutor even recommended it to the court this morning as "an option."

This provision, encompassed in the so-

China Declares Its Workers Toil Harder in Honor of Mao

By FOX BUTTERFIELD
Special to The New York Times

HONG KONG, Sept. 24—China's workers from Peking to Canton are setting new production records to honor the late Chairman Mao Tse-tung, a series of articles in the Chinese press says. The articles appear to be another indication that China's new leaders, whoever they are, are trying to provide a sense of continuity and stability in the face of the uncertainty following Mao's death Sept. 9.

Notes on China

The articles, which have appeared over the last two days, may also indicate a growing concern in Peking over China's industry, which after over a decade of remarkable growth has shown signs of slowdown this year under the impact of worker unrest and factional quarrels.

In Shanghai, according to a dispatch yesterday by Hsinhua, the Chinese press agency, "tens of thousands of workers have voluntarily given up their holidays to work" since Mao's death. As a result, daily steel output in Shanghai, China's largest city, "was raised more than 17 percent over that of the average daily output in the first eight days of September."

On Job Around the Clock

On the day Mao died, Hsinhua said, some workers in the Shanghai No. 1 iron and steel plant, a model factory, "stayed on the job around the clock" and set a record for the year.

Similarly, at the Anshan iron and steel complex, China's largest iron ore mine and steel-making center, the workers "turned grief into strength" and raised their output of iron ore by 26.86 percent in the days after Mao's death compared with the earlier days of September. In Peking, workers at the February 7th rolling stock plant have "decided to go through all four volumes of the Selected Works of Mao Tse-tung" to raise their political consciousness and increase production.

The importance of insuring normal production can be gauged by a radio broadcast from Chekiang Province on Sept. 9 just a few hours before Mao's death was announced. The broadcast, which reported the outcome of a meeting of the Chekiang Revolutionary Committee, indicated that the province's economy had been suffering from "such capitalist practices as embezzlement, theft and speculation."

Alludes to Factional Fighting

Chekiang has reportedly been plagued by factional fighting for the last two years, and last year 15,000 soldiers had to be sent in to occupy factories in Hangchow, the provincial capital. In an apparent allusion to these continued factional problems, the broadcast also said that personnel "should not squabble endlessly over past grudges."

Such disputes had been instigated, the broadcast said, by "capitalist roaders" like Teng Hsiao-ping, the former deputy prime minister who was ousted last spring, in large part for purportedly overemphasizing production.

The Chekiang radio added that the meeting had drawn up "a work plan for the next four months," a possible hint that the province's 1976 economic plan had fallen behind schedule and had had to be revised.

Although the memorial services for Chairman Mao produced no definitive answer to the puzzle of who his successors will be, they did offer some intriguing clues to the inner workings of Peking's leadership that analysts here are now sifting through.

Why, for instance, some specialists wondered, was Mao's widow, Chiang Ching, never mentioned as his wife throughout the eight days of mourning and portrayed only in her role as a member of the Politburo. Whenever Miss Chiang was listed in the Chinese press as a member of the funeral committee or shown on television attending the memorial ceremonies, she stood in her proper party rank.

By contrast, when Prime Minister Chou En-lai died last January, his widow, Teng Ying-chao, was mentioned as his wife, and she was shown on Chinese television receiving condolences from other party leaders.

There were two different explanations for the impersonal treatment of Miss Chiang, the analysts surmised, and they reinforce each other. One was that because Chairman Mao loomed so large, because in a sense he belonged to all of China's 800 million people, Miss Chiang did not want to appear to claim him only for herself.

The other explanation points out that Miss Chiang has never been popular with many party leaders, especially the veteran party administrators. For Miss Chiang has a sharp tongue, and during the Cultural Revolution she spared no effort to denounce many officials for their supposed capitalist leanings. So after Mao's death these men may have tried to make sure that she could not wrap herself in Mao's mantle and use it to further her position.

The Chairman's death may also have raised a question about the future of his personal bodyguards, the so-called 8341 unit. Commanded by Wang Tung-hsing, a little-publicized member of the powerful party Politburo, the 8341 guards apparently also played a key role as Mao's special secret agents, spying on other party leaders.

According to an article last week in the party paper Jenmin Jih Pao, members of the 8341 unit recalled that Mao had sent them out "to make investigations" and then "patiently listened to our reports on the material collected."

The guards hinted at the kind of investigations they made. "You showed us that attention must be paid to spotting China's Khrushchevs and making active criticism of the bourgeoisie in the party," they said of Mao. Liu Shao-chi, the former head of state who was disgraced in the Cultural Revolution, was known as China's Khrushchev, and Mr. Teng has been called one of the leading members of the bourgeoisie within the party.

Paid Personal Attention

The guards also related that Mao had paid constant attention to the training of the 8341 unit. "You always took time out from your packed schedule to receive us, talk with us, lecture us and give us important instructions."

The numerical strength of Mao's guards is unknown, with estimates ranging from several thousand to more than a division, or over 15,000 men.

Another article in Jenmin Jih Pao last week for the first time listed 46 persons whom it described as "the staff members and medical personnel who worked at the side of Chairman Mao."

It was an indication of the secrecy in which China's leaders work that analysts here could recognize the name of only one man on the list, Chang Yao-tzu, who earlier had been identified as a member of the general office of the Central Committee.

At the "Land and Liberty" commune in Monterrey, Mexico, members of a local cooperative make concrete construction blocks, which are sold to residents of the community at two-thirds of the commercial rate.

Maoists Run Struggling Commune In Suburbs of Big Mexican City

By ALAN RIDING
Special to The New York Times

MONTERREY, Mexico—At a distance, the slum called Land and Liberty looks like any of a score of squatter settlements that surround this city. Its streets are unpaved, it has no running water, its dwellings are a patchwork of stone, wood and metal and its inhabitants are shabbily dressed. But Land and Liberty is a Maoist commune, and it stands on land occupied more than three years ago in this stronghold of conservatism. The inhabitants have been organized into work groups, the slum is governed by a popular assembly and the Monterrey authorities, including the police, dare not enter.

The Talk of Monterrey

The slum has no bars. Its little Roman Catholic chapel doubles as a health clinic. The brothels have been turned into annexes to the school that the community built.

The Maoism is barely noticeable though. There are no visible portraits of the Chinese leader, and the red flags that fly display clenched fists rather than yellow stars. Many of the squatters acknowledge that they know little about Mao Tse-tung or Communism.

Guided by Maoist Principles

Yet the comunity, the brainchild of a dozen young university graduates who are dedicated Maoists, is guided by Maoist principles of collective leadership and self-reliance.

"We became involved when we were approached by a group of slum dwellers who had been cheated out of land," one of the Maoists, Dr. Hector Camero, explained. "About 30 of us carried out the invasion. Within two days, 1,200 families had arrived here."

As often occurs in Mexico, he said families living in slums or in rundown rented quarters formed a group to negotiate with property developers, and after paying deposits and fees, months of delays and no sign of land, they became frustrated and resorted to direct action.

The 150-acre plot that became the commune after the occupation, on March 28, 1973, is still owned by a handful of wealthy local families who are prepared to sell, but the invaders are unwilling to buy.

"Our claim to the land is based on our natural right to survive," Dr. Camero said. "Because the city refused to supply us with water and electricity, we considered the services nationalized and took what we needed."

Water Taps and Pirated Power

Within six months the district had been organized into blocks and avenues, common water taps had been placed, most homes were pirating electricity and the first of three schools had been built.

The Maoist doctors, economists and lawyers who moved into the slum began the organizing work and encouraged attendance at popular assemblies.

"We do not talk Maoism to the assemblies," Dr. Camero said. "We do not even attend most meetings. Our aim is that the people should control their own lives in Land and Liberty as they should in society. We believe that any political party should be formed from below."

The bearded doctor, who is 30 years old, also said the community had avoided individual leaders to prevent what he described as the political corruption and bossism endemic in Mexico. Instead, the 3,000 or so adults elect 40 representatives for periods of four months.

The Monterrey city government has refused to assist the community until legal title to the land is in order, so no solutions to the problems of drainage, drinking water and adequate light appear imminent.

Local cooperatives have helped by buying cooking equipment and four machines for making construction blocks, which have been sold to community members at two-thirds the going rate.

At the school, which has 2,500 primary and secondary pupils divided into three shifts, the youngsters have their own weekly assemblies and organize collective work groups for washing windows, repairing furniture and farming a corn plot.

The emergency of a small though organized society among the slums has had both social and political impact on the urban poor that make up well over half of Monterrey's fast-growing population of 1.8 million.

Tiny Jail Houses Minor Offenders

Since policemen do not normally patrol the slums, Land and Liberty organized its own vigilante groups to clean up the area, and it built a tiny jail in which minor offenders are kept for as long as a week. "If we pick up anyone who has committeed a serious crime," a construction worker said, "we hand them over to the police."

In recent months the assembly has formed a women's league, an independent trade union and an Independent Popular Front that seeks to mobilize 36 other Monterrey slums.

The attraction of Land and Liberty to other squatters is evidenced by constant applications for plots. "The assembly must approve any new arrivals," a member told a recent visitor. "The new family must then camp out in the main avenue for 15 days, where they can be judged by the community to make sure that they are not drunks or antisocial."

The organizers of the commune believe their success so far is due entirely to their own efforts and determination. Local political sources noted that the commune had ben tolerated because the outgoing Government of President Luis Echeverría Alvarez, who will be succeded Dec. 1 by President-elect José López Portillo, has been eager to project a leftist and populist image.

Kodama Case Stalls Japan's Investigation Of Lockheed Affair

By ANDREW H. MALCOLM
Special to The New York Times

TOKYO, Sept. 24 — Prime Minister Takeo Miki told Parliament today that his Government's investigation of the Lockheed bribery scandal would take longer than expected.

But Mr. Miki vowed to allow prosecutors to pursue their work unhindered by political interference or considerations, and he promised a full report on the scandal to Parliament at some future date.

Mr. Miki, in his formal policy statement to the extraordinary session of Parliament, attributed the delays to difficulties encountered in investigating the so-called "Kodama route."

This was a reference to Yoshio Kodama, the aging power broker who acted as Lockheed's secret sales agent here. Prosecutors have traced most of the American money that flowed into Japan through the Marubeni Trading Corporation, Lockheed's official sales agent, and through All Nippon Airways, the eventual purchaser of 21 Lockheed L-1011 Tristar jets.

Alleged Connections to Underworld

Eighteen Japanese businessmen and politicians, including former Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka, have been arrested and charged with crimes involving the $12.6 million that Lockheed says it sent here to promote its aircraft sales.

But the 65-year-old Mr. Kodama, a rightist with widespread political influence and alleged underworld connections, has largely thwarted official interrogation attempts. His doctors say he is too ill to testify before Parliament or meet officials privately for long periods.

During brief question periods he has reportedly denied wrongdoing in the affair. He has, however, already been charged with tax evasion.

Throughout the political turmoil, Mr. Miki has spoken of the need for a complete investigation. "My concern," he said today, "was that unless the whole truth was unveiled, Japan's democracy might be seriously undermined."

The Prime Minister is being challenged for leadership from within his own Liberal Democratic Party.

Senate Committee Moves to Bar A Sale of 650 Missiles to Saudis

to Saudi Arabia might be "shocking" and "terrible," he said, "there are more shocking things that can happen to us and Israel than this sale."

Until shortly before the vote, State Department officials had been expressing confidence that they had the votes within the committee to defeat the Case resolution.

As Senator Case openly acknowledged at one point, the principal reason that he was pressing for an immediate vote was because time was running short for Congress to act on the resolution before adjourning late next week. Under legislation adopted two years ago, the House and Senate can by a concurrent resolution veto a foreign military sale.

As analyzed by Senator Case's aides, there was "a very good chance" that the Senate would approve the resolution in the next few days. But the situation was described as "tight" in the House, where some pro-Israel members were trying to arrange a meeting of the House Committee on International Relations for next Monday or Tuesday to approve the resolution and bring it to the House floor for action before adjournment.

Noting that Saudi Arabia already has 1,000 Maverick missiles, Senator Case contended that the sale of an additional 650 was "most unnecessary in terms of Saudi defensive needs."

The air-launched Maverick is particularly designed for use against tanks, and one concern expressed in Israeli quarters is that in the event of another Mideast war, Saudi Arabia might transfer the missiles to other Arab countries fighting Israel.

In a statement after the committee vote, Senator Case said Saudi Arabia's "possession of such large numbers of sophisticated weapons" would be "a disturbing and potentially destabilizing factor in the balance of power equation in the Middle East" and "could raise the potential pressure on Saudi Arabia to become more deeply involved in any future Middle East conflict."

Senator McGovern said in a statement that the importance of the sale is more political and symbolic than military. "To Saudi Arabia—a country which is friendly to the United States and which is our largest single foreign oil supplier—this sale is a test of our friendship and, more important, a test of the reliability of the United States as the mainstay of Saudi security," he said.

Senator McGovern said "there is no reason to fear a transfer of these missiles because they are useable only on American planes, which Israel but no Arab 'confrontation' state possesses."

China Cancels National Holiday Because of the Death of Mao

PEKING, Sept. 24 (Reuters)—China has called off next Friday's National Day celebrations because of the death of Chairman Mao Tse-tung, officials said tonight.

The Oct. 1 festivities, which mark the anniversary of the founding of Communist China, are traditionally a major holiday. They usually include a huge reception in the Great Hall of the People. Crowds flock through parks bedecked with streamers and revolutionary operas are performed on open-air stages.

"As the passing away of Chairman Mao, the great leader and teacher of the Chinese people, has plunged the 800 million people across the country into profound grief and deep mourning, we are not going to hold the National Day reception or any other celebration activities," a Foreign Ministry spokesman said.

Britain Keeping Koh-i-Noor Gem

LONDON, Sept. 24 (Reuters)—Britain has turned down a request from Pakistan for the return of Koh-i-noor diamond, richest of all the British crown jewels, official sources said today. The diamond, acknowledged as one of the world's finest, came into British hands in 1849 following the annexation of the Punjab.

Sarkis Seeks Corridor Between Rival Beirut Areas

By HENRY TANNER
Special to The New York Times

BEIRUT, Lebanon, Sept. 24—President Elias Sarkis, who was sworn in yesterday, today began a task that few heads of state have had to face on their first days in office.

He was trying to arrange things so Cabinet officers, political leaders and even plain citizens could call on him without crossing a military front line and without being shelled and shot at by snipers.

Mr. Sarkis moved into the Presidential Palace at Baabda, a Christian village in the foothills just east of Beirut. His predecessor, Suleiman Franjieh, was driven from the palace late in March by direct hits from Lebanese Moslem artillery. The palace has been hit many times since.

Baabda is easily accessible from Christian-held east Beirut and the Christian territory to the north. From Moslem-held west Beirut, where all the Moslem political figures and some of the Christian politicians live, it can be reached only by crossing the front line, where there is continuous shelling and sniping.

Prime Minister Rashid Karami, a Moslem, thus was not able to call on the President today to submit his resignation and Mr. Sarkis has not yet been able to hold direct consultations with any of the men he may want to consider for the post of Prime Minister. They have to be Moslems, under Lebanon's political system of apportioning posts among the country's religious groups.

A Safe Corridor Sought

Mr. Sarkis arranged talks between the Palestinians and Lebanese Army officers on ways to open a safe corridor from west Beirut to Baabda. The talks started last night.

Such a corridor is of crucial importance also because it would enable the Christians of east Beirut to drive through Baabda to the airport, which is in Moslem-controlled territory and has been closed since early June, when Christian artillery destroyed a plane, killing the pilot.

The Christians fired on the airport because they were unable to make use of it. Its reopening to both sides would have an immediate economic and political impact.

Heavy shelling and gunfire continued today in Beirut and in the mountains despite the cease-fire declared last night by Yasir Arafat, the head of the Palestine Liberation Organization. Mr. Arafat announced in a letter to Mr. Sarkis that he had ordered the guerrilla forces to cease firing as a "gift to the new President."

Shells fell this morning on the residential quarters of west Beirut.

Today was Id al-Fitr, the first of three holidays marking the end of Ramadan, the Moslem month of fasting. Political activities were at a standstill on the Moslem side of the line.

RHODESIA MOVE STIRS EXCITEMENT AT U.N.

Security Council Delegates Begin Conferring on Possibility of Removing Sanctions

By PETER GROSE

Special to The New York Times

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Sept. 24—Security Council delegates started hasty informal canvassing among themselves today, in anticipation of moves next week toward a possible lifting of United Nations sanctions against Rhodesia.

Termination of the decade-old program of economic pressures was one of the conditions of Prime Minister Ian D. Smith of Rhodesia for agreeing to the principle of black majority rule within two years, as announced in Salisbury today. There was little suggestion here that the Security Council would lift the sanctions abruptly, without detailed assurances that the entire political program would be carried out as announced.

News of Mr. Smith's announcement generated excitement at the United Nations. Several African delegates admitted their "astonishment" that Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger had apparently achieved the concessions from the white Rhodesian Government that had eluded British diplomacy for so long.

Skepticism About the Plan

Some of the more radical African diplomats expressed skepticism about how the transitional arrangements might actually work out. Specifically they were concerned about how the black members of the proposed Council of State would be chosen and whether they would be representative of the leading nationalist movements of Rhodesia.

Official reaction, including that of Secretary General Kurt Waldheim, was cautious as most diplomats preferred to read the full text of Mr. Smith's speech before commenting formally. Presumably any definitive action will await Mr. Kissinger's report to the General Assembly, scheduled for next Thursday.

The Rhodesia sanctions, first imposed in 1966 after Rhodesia unilaterally declared its independence from Britain, were tightened up and put in mandatory form by the Security Council in May 1968. A lengthy resolution, approved unanimously, defined sweeping restrictions against any form of economic interchange—imports, exports, commercial transport or investment—with Rhodesians, whether private individuals or companies or Government authorities.

In progressive refinements to the sanctions, the most recent last April, the Security Council has attempted to close whatever loopholes it could, without, however, succeeding in altering the willingness of the United States Congress to import Rhodesian chrome or in ending the rail and highway links with South Africa that have remained Rhodesia's most crucial lifeline.

Britain Set to Play Key Role in Rhodesian Transition

By PETER T. KILBORN

Special to The New York Times

LONDON, Sept. 24—Britain's hopes for black rule in Rhodesia, its renegade former colony, have risen and then collapsed enough in the last decade to make any Briton skeptical of new initiatives. Even so, there was a sense here today that Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger may finally have pulled it off.

"Acceptance of the inevitability of majority rule," a Government statement said, "is a victory for realism and common sense. Without such a response, Rhodesia would have been faced with insurperable problems."

"There's a strong feeling that time has run out for Mr. Smith," said a Conservative Party spokesman after hearing Prime Minister Ian D. Smith of Rhodesia make his acceptance broadcast tonight.

"The offer Smith couldn't refuse," proclaimed the tabloid Evening Standard on its front page.

"I'm obviously delighted," said Peter Hain, chairman of Britain's Young Liberals and one of the country's best known foes of apartheid. "It's too good to be true," he said.

Because of its lingering colonial responsibilities for Rhodesia, Britain now becomes the broker in what are certain to be difficult steps toward a new and independent government there.

The Road to Majority Rule

First Britain will have to rehabilitate Rhodesia—now a legal nonentity in British eyes—as a fully legitimate, British dependent territory, freed of trade sanctions and other constraints that were imposed to bring pressure on Mr. Smith in the 1960's.

The steps from there to black majority rule will follow the rough outline that Prime Minister James Callaghan proposed last March 22, when he was Foreign Secretary. The only alternative to a rapid transfer of power, he said then, was "an all-out war which the white Rhodesians could not win."

Mr. Callaghan called for elections within two years and majority rule as a condition for independence. Britain, he said, would assist in establishing a new form of government, offer financial aid, and join with other countries in efforts in the United Nations to remove the sanctions against Rhodesia.

The financial question is likely to be important to white Rhodesians. Mr. Callaghan had indicated that Britain would help provide funds for those wishing to leave the country.

Meeting Set on Financial Issues

At a news conference here today with Anthony Crosland, the British Foreign Secretary, Mr. Kissinger said that American, British, and South African representatives would meet in Washington next week to consider the financial issues.

Mr. Kissinger stressed that the proposal that Mr. Smith had accepted was strictly Mr. Callaghan's.

"I have seen references that Rhodesian authorities are now considering a Kissinger proposal," he said, "and I think it is well to understand what is being considered in Salisbury. The basis of the proposals is the plan put forward by Prime Minister Callaghan on March 22."

Mr. Crosland said that many important details of Britain's role in helping Rhodesia toward majority rule and full independence had yet to be settled. "We would give whatever help we can to this constitutional conference," he said of the talks between whites and blacks leading to a new government.

But he added that he did not know if Britain would be asked to preside or where the talks would be held, though he thought it would be in Africa rather than London.

Mr. Kissinger, meanwhile, left room for continued American assistance. "The United States will be prepared to back up whatever efforts Britain will make and continue its interest in a peaceful solution," he said.

Tanzanians Cool to Rhodesian Plan

By JOHN DARNTON

Special to The New York Times

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanzania, Sept. 24—There was no immediate response tonight from President Julius K. Nyerere to the white Rhodesian Government's apparent capitulation, but officials close to him reacted unenthusiastically and with disappointment to the speech of Prime Minister Ian D. Smith.

"This is nowhere near what we wanted," said one high Tanzanian official, speaking privately. "Kissinger was left in no doubt at all about our position, and Smith's speech does not reach it."

As fragmented details of Mr. Smith's address became known here late tonight—the Salisbury radio cannot be picked up here—the initial response was guarded but mainly negative.

At a news conference on Tuesday, President Nyerere, who has assumed the position of spokesman for black Africa on the conflict in the south, said that he was eagerly awaiting Mr. Smith's speech and suggested that, no matter what language was used, he would know if the white minority Government finally embraced an acceptable plan for black rule.

Mr. Nyerere's press spokesman, Sam Mdee, said tonight that the President would "have nothing to say at the moment."

His Position Is Crucial

The President's position is crucial to a settlement of the conflict through the diplomacy of Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger because Mr. Nyerere has influence over both Kenneth D. Kaunda, the moderate President of Zambia, and Samora Machel, the revolutionary leader of Mozambique.

It is likely that the African leaders will study Mr. Smith's speech and perhaps consult with each other before issuing their definitive positions. Another conference of the five so-called front-line African Presidents is possible.

The questions being raised here concern which Rhodesian nationalist leaders would meet with Mr. Smith, and which one of them would emerge as the African prime minister in an interim government.

One strong candidate is Joshua Nkomo, the moderate head of the African National Council faction who has conferred with Mr. Kissinger. He has the support of President Kaunda, and the prospect of helping him to power could move the Zambian President to back the Rhodesian proposals.

Mr. Nkomo, however, is not acceptable to many of the nationalists who have been bearing the brunt of the fighting. They look instead to political figures such as Robert Mugabe, who is in self-exile in Mozambique. Today it was reported that Mr. Nkomo was leaving Lusaka, Zambia, for Salisbury.

One of the injured, Eliah Mokoena, said the police had arrived and "without saying a word" fired into the crowd. A police spokesman said, "They were trying to get to Johannesburg but we stopped them and sent them home."

An estimated 1,500 blacks surged through the city's main shopping street yesterday shouting black-power slogans and smashing store windows.

The police charged with riot sticks and arrested 400 demonstrators.

The rioting marked the end of a six-day lull in the anti-Government violence that has swept South Africa for more than 14 weeks, killing at least 376 persons.

Text of Address by Rhodesian Prime Minister Accepting Plan for Black Rule

SALISBURY, Rhodesia, Sept. 24 (AP) —Following is a transcript of the text of Prime Minister Ian D. Smith's address on the future of Rhodesia:

As you are all aware, I have recently had a series of meetings in Pretoria, firstly with the South African Prime Minister, then with Dr. Kissinger and finally with Dr. Kissinger and Mr. Vorster together.

At these meetings the position of Rhodesia in relation to the rest of southern Africa, and indeed to the Western nations, was discussed in great detail. It was made abundantly clear to me, and to my colleagues who accompanied me, that as long as the present circumstances in Rhodesia prevailed, we could expect no help or support of any kind from the free world. On the contrary, the pressures on us from the free world would continue to mount. Dr. Kissinger has been working in close consultation with the British Government and he has the full support of the other major Western powers.

Dr. Kissinger assured me that we share a common aim and a common purpose, namely to keep Rhodesia in the free world and to keep it from Communist penetration. In this regard, of course, Rhodesia is in a key position in southern Africa.

Associated Press

Effect on Subcontinent

What happens here will inevitably affect the entire subcontinent. Although we and the Western powers have a common purpose, we differ from them in how best to achieve this. I would be dishonest if I did not state quite clearly that the proposals which were put to us in Pretoria do not represent what in our view would be the best solution for Rhodesia's problems.

Regrettably, however, we were not able to make our views prevail, although we were able to achieve some modifications in the proposals. The American and British Governments, together with the major Western powers, have made up their minds as to the kind of solution they wish to see in Rhodesia and they are determined to bring it about. The alternative to acceptance of the proposals was explained to us in the clearest of terms, which left no room for misunderstanding.

Since our return the Cabinet have examined in great detail and in all its aspects the choice which faces us and we have done this in full knowledge of the heavy responsibility which we carry for the welfare and the safety of all Rhodesians, white and black. In the light of this assessment, the Cabinet has decided to accept the proposals put to us in Pretoria and the parliamentary caucus of my party, which met all day yesterday, has endorsed our decision.

'Package Deal' Involved

Before I spell out these proposals in detail there are some general comments I should make. The proposals represent what, in negotiating parlance, is usually called a "package deal," which means that some aspects are more readily acceptable than others. Firstly, on the positive side, as soon as the necessary preliminaries have been carried out, sanctions will be lifted and there will be a cessation of terrorism.

Dr. Kissinger has given me a categorical assurance to this effect and my acceptance of the proposals is conditional upon the implementation of both of these undertakings. In the light of previous experience there will be some understandable skepticism regarding the undertaking that terrorism will cease, but on this occasion the assurance is given, not only on the authority of the United States Government, but of the British Government as well.

Since the weekend meetings, we have reiterated to Dr. Kissinger and those who are working with him our concern over their ability to fulfill their undertaking to halt terrorism, and we stressed the responsibility which they carry in this regard. They have reaffirmed to us their conviction that they will be able to insure the implementation of this condition.

Rise in Terrorism at First

Nevertheless, if we are realistic we must accept that terrorism cannot be halted at the drop of a hat and it will therefore be incumbent on the security forces and all those living in the affected areas to act accordingly. Indeed, it is likely that there might be an immediate and temporary increase in terrorist activity.

It is also necessary for me to issue a warning with regard to sanctions. It is essential that the security of commercial information should be strictly preserved in the coming months and all those concerned are urged to be particularly careful not to reveal any information bearing on the breaking of sanctions.

Secondly, together with the lifting of sanctions in all their forms there will be an injection of development capital which will provide an immediate stimulus to the economy.

Thirdly, because the Western powers are mindful of the need to retain the provisions. I shall deal with these more fully later in my statement.

Turning now to the constitutional aspects, the proposals provide for the setting up of an interim government comprising a council of state and a council of ministers. The council of state will be the supreme body and will have equal numbers of white and black members with a white chairman.

As is customary in the Cabinet system, decisions will normally be reached by consensus, but where a vote is necessary, a two-thirds majority will be required. Its first duty will be to appoint the council of ministers. However, the most important function of the council of state will be to draw up a new constitution. Its deliberations will therefore be of vital significance for the future of our country and all of its people. Its decisions will determine whether Rhodesia remains a stable, democratic and progressive country. It is important to note that this constitution will be drawn up in Rhodesia, by Rhodesians, and will not be imposed from outside.

Terms of Proposal Given

I am confident that in these circumstances and, given good will and realism on both sides, the right decisions will be taken. It will be a majority-rule constitution and this is expressly laid down in the proposals. My own position on majority rule is well known. I have stated in public many times that I believe I echo the views of the majority of both black and white Rhodesians when I say that we support majority rule, provided that it is responsible rule.

The council of state will be given two years to complete its task of producing a constitution and undertaking all the detailed work necessary for elections on the basis of that constitution.

Some may regard this as too short a period, but I believe there are advantages in aiming at reaching finality as soon as possible. Having given you the general background, I shall now read the actual terms of the proposals put to me by Dr. Kissinger. Paragraph six relating to economic aid is an agreed summary of a longer paper.

1. Rhodesia agrees to majority rule within two years.

2. Representatives of the Rhodesian Government will meet immediately at a mutually agreed place with African leaders to organize an interim government to function until majority rule is implemented.

3. The interim government should consist of a council of state, half of whose members will be black and half white with a white chairman without a special vote. The European and African sides would nominate their representatives. Its function will include:

Legislation—general supervisory responsibilities — and supervising the process of drafting the constitution.

The interim government should also have a council of ministers with a majority of Africans and an African first minister. For the period of the interim government the ministers of defense and of law and order would be white. Decisions of the council of ministers to be taken by two-thirds majority. Its functions should include:

Delegates legislative authority and executive responsibility.

4. The United Kingdom will enact enabling legislation for the process to majority rule. Upon enactment of that legislation Rhodesia will also enact such legislation as may be necessary to the process.

5. Upon the establishment of the interim government sanctions will be lifted and all acts of war, including guerrilla warfare, will cease.

6. Substantial economic support will be made available by the international community to provide assurance to Rhodesians about the economic future of the country. A trust fund will be established outside Rhodesia which will organize and finance a major international effort to respond to the economic opportunities of this country and to the effects of the changes taking place. The fund will, inter alia, support the internal and external economic circumstances of the country and provide development assistance, guarantees and investment incentives to a wide variety of projects.

The aim will be to expand the industrial and mineral production of the country, to enhance agricultural potential by suitable land utilization and development programs and to provide the necessary training and educational facilities to provide the essential flow of skills.

Underwriting by Trust Fund

Pension rights, the investment of the individual in his own home and-or farm and the remittances overseas of an individual's liquid resources within levels yet to be stipulated will be guaranteed by the interim and subsequent governments. These particular measures will be underwritten by the trust fund thereby giving a firm international base to the government guarantee.

That was a brief outline of the proposed support measures which have now to be worked out in details. As I have said, the measures, in particular the trust fund, are aimed at giving both the European and the African certainty as to his future in a multiracial society and to demonstrate not only that the economic and social stability of the country will be maintained but that every individual can look forward to continued rising standards of living.

In our discussion in Pretoria, my colleagues and I made it clear that Rhodesians were not enamored of schemes to buy them out—they were looking for a solution which would mean that they could go on living in their homeland. We were assured that the other parties to the proposal strongly supported this contention. Accordingly, whatever plan is produced to assist those who decide to leave, the incentive should be aimed at making it worthwhile for Rhodesians to stay.

Message to Kissinger

These are the proposals which were put to us in Pretoria. With the agreement of Cabinet and with the support of caucus I have sent a message to Dr. Kissinger indicating my acceptance of the proposals, subject to their being accepted by the other parties involved, and as I stated earlier, subject to the lifting of sanctions and the cessation of terrorism.

The next stage will be the meeting between Government representatives and African leaders to set up the council of state, as the first stage of establishing the interim government. This, I hope, will take place as soon as possible, because once the decision is taken it will be in the best interests of Rhodesia, to proceed without delay.

I have given you the more important parts of what transpired during these negotiations. Were I to continue talking for the next two hours, I would not be able to tell you everything, and unfortunately there is much which cannot be disclosed in public. I hope you will derive some reassurance from the fact that my Cabinet, and my caucus, came to the clear and positive conclusion that on the evidence before us this is our best choice.

What I have said this evening will be the cause of deep concern to you all, and understandably so. But we ... in a world of rapid change and ... are to survive in such a world we ... be prepared to adapt ourselves ... change. SMITH ACCEPTS PLAN FOR SHIFT IN RHODEISA

Government representatives and African leaders to set up a council of state." He did not indicate who the black leaders would be. Twice, though, he referred to "other parties to the proposal," suggesting that nationalist figures outside Rhodesia had been presented with the package and had consented to it.

After the speech was broadcast, Josiah Chinamano, the deputy chairman of the nationalist faction headed by Joshua Nkomo, said that "despite some flaws, the proposal was welcome." He said he foresaw "no difficulty in getting black ministers." Mr. Chinamano added, "We will know the whole marrow of the proposal tomorrow when Mr. Nkomo returns here." Mr. Nkomo has been in Mozambique and Zambia consulting with other nationalists.

As outlined by Mr. Smith, the supreme body of the interim government is to be the council of state. It will have equal numbers of whites and blacks with a white serving as chairman. The council will draft a constitution and supervise elections in two years. "It will be a majority-rule constitution and this is expressly laid down in the proposals," said Mr. Smith.

The council of state will also appoint a council of ministers who will have executive responsibility over government departments. This group will have a black majority and black chief minister. However, the ministries of defense and law and order are to be headed by whites during the two-year transition.

Provision Considered Crucial

This last provision is regarded as crucial by most whites and some blacks who feel that only the disciplined, predominantly black but white-led security forces could prevent tribal and factional differences among Africans from flaring into violence and chaos.

Mr. Smith declared that his acceptance of the package was conditional upon the removal of economic sanctions against Rhodesia and the cessation of guerrilla warfare. He said he had the "categorized assurance" of Mr. Kissinger that these conditions would be met.

The sanctions, which have been widely flouted by private businessmen and even such Communist states as North Korea, were imposed by a vote of the United Nations. It is difficult to see how they could be juridically removed unless a black African country such as Tanzania sponsored their revocation.

As to stopping the guerrilla war, most of the black guerrilla fighters are massed in camps in Mozambique. It would require either pressure from the guerrilla leaders there or from Mozambique's Government—most likely from both—to halt the infiltration.

Mr. Smith said that since the meeting in Pretoria he had repeated the opinion of his Government on whether terrorist attacks could indeed be called off. The Prime Minister said that Mr. Kissinger and his aides "reaffirmed to us their conviction that they will be able to insure the implementation of this condition."

Another aspect of the plan as presented by Mr. Smith calls for a trust fund to provide "both the European and African certainty as to his future in a multiracial society."

Unavoidable But Not Desirable

The fund, he said, would seek to expand industrial and mineral production, enhance agricultural potential and finance training and education programs. It would also underwrite pension rights and the equities of citizens in their homes and farms. It could not be learned how the fund was to be financed. Mr. Smith emphasized he had rejected "schemes to buy out" white Rhodesians.

"Whatever plan is produced to assist those who decide to leave, the incentive should be aimed at making it worthwhile for Rhodesians to stay," he said.

At the outset of his address Mr. Smith emphatically stressed that he regarded the acceptance of the proposals as "unavoidable but hardly desirable.

"I would be dishonest if I did not state quite clearly that the proposals which were put to us in Pretoria do not represent what in our view would be the best solution for Rhodesia's problems," said Mr. Smith. "Regrettably, we were not able to make our views prevail. The American and British Governments, together with the major Western powers have made up their minds as to the kind of solution they wish to see in Rhodesia."

He did not spell out these alternatives. In fact, he said there was "unfortunately much that cannot be disclosed in public." However, during the last three days as members of his Government debated the proposals it became clear that it was largely the threat of economic strangulation by South Africa and its unavoidable effect on the Rhodesian Army that ultimately forced Mr. Smith's hand.

Strain Beginning to Tell

"The South Africans were ready to cut off our water," said a hawkish member of Parliament yesterday. A military figure explained that without fuel from South Africa the antiguerrilla campaign that depends largely on helicopters would come to a halt.

Another officer explained that despite Rhodesian success in operations against guerrillas the strain on Government troops was beginning to tell. Contacts with small guerrilla units were occurring hundreds of miles apart and helicopter-fire teams were being airlifted almost continuously to remote areas.

At the same time it was estimated that only some 1,200 guerrillas were actually operating in the country while 12,000 were in training in Mozambique. Since the guerrilla attacks began in December 1972, Rhodesia has reported having killed 1,633 guerrillas—1,020 this year. In the four years of fighting 151 Rhodesian security force members have reportedly been killed in combat, 76 this year.

On Aug. 16 Rhodesian forces attacked a training camp in Mozambique, killing a reported 300 people. This was seen as the beginning of a campaign to strike out at the guerrillas before they entered Rhodesia in small units, spreading thin the limited reserves of the Rhodesian army.

The international condemnation of Rhodesia for that raid, and the private protests made by South Africa, which has feared the provoking of a wide-ranging racial war, prevented other strikes at encampments across the Mozambique border. Ten days after the raid South Africa withdrew 50 helicopter pilots who had been flying for the Rhodesian Air Force.

Although Mr. Smith did not mention the prospect of a worsening military situation or the threat of sharply shrinking South African support in his address, he observed: "I hope you gain some reassurance from the fact that my Cabinet and my caucus came to the clear and positive conclusion that on the evidence before us this is the best choice." Some of Mr. Smith's Cabinet members are known here as being far more committed to fighting and holding out than Mr. Smith.

Mr. Smith ended his speech with an appeal to all Rhodesians to unify and dedicate themselves to seeking success within the imposed proposals. And he warned against falling into "premature despondency."

As for himself, he said he hoped "to share the privilege of continuing to participate in helping to guide the destiny of Rhodesia."

As he has often done in speeches here, Mr. Smith, a World War II fighter pilot, quoted Sir Winston Churchill: "Now is not the end. It is not even the beginning of the end. But it is, perhaps, the end of the beginning."

Vorster Silent, but Critics See Changes in So. Africa

By JOHN F. BURNS
Special to The New York Times

JOHANNESBURG, Sept. 24—The South African Government maintained silence tonight on the Rhodesian constitutional settlement it had helped to engineer, but critics of Prime Minister John Vorster's administration predicted that a shift to majority rule in Rhodesia would increase pressures for far-reaching racial reforms in South Africa itself.

Mr. Vorster listened, with other South Africans, to a broadcast of Prime Minister Ian D. Smith's speech announcing the Rhodesia settlement. However, a power failure at the South African Broadcasting Corporation's headquarters here cut the speech off the air at mid-point. Mr. Vorster went to bed, saying through a spokesman that he would have no comment until he has had time to study the full text.

However, the leader of one of the principal opposition parties issued a statement saying that South Africa could learn much from the settlement.

Soviet Threat Foreseen

"The reconciliation in Rhodesia has two important lessons for South Africa," said Colin Eglin, leader of the Progressive Reform Party. "The days of exclusive white decision-making are over, firstly, and secondly, no country, like no group, can stand alone indefinitely."

An ultrarightist opposition party here urged Mr. Smith not to concede. In a cable sent to the Rhodesian leader before he announced his decision, Albert Hertzog, leader of the Herstigte Nasionale Party, which broke away from Mr. Vorster's governing National Party in protest against concessions to blacks, offered an assurance of support if Mr. Smith chose to cling to white-minority rule.

A commentator in The Rand Daily Mail, Donald Woods, anticipated the settlement by predicting that it would give added momentum to black pressures for racial reforms in South Africa. Mr. Woods suggested Mr. Vorster was yielding on Rhodesia and South-West Africa in hopes that black nationalists would not threaten South Africa.

Vorster Given Credit

In an editorial in tomorrow's edition the Rand Daily Mail, which has been outspokenly critical of Mr. Vorster's domestic policies, gave the Prime Minister equal credit for the settlement with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger. The paper termed the settlement "fair and hopeful," but warned of the difficulties ahead: "It can easily be wrecked by African feuds, white anxieties or pugnaciousness on any front," it said.

Mr. Vorster's role in the settlement was the subject of criticism in both the liberal and conservative camps. Liberals generally argued, as did Mr. Woods, that Mr. Vorster's efforts were hypocritical, given his refusal to cede to black rule at home. Conservatives wrote angry letters to newspapers arguing that the policy would only turn the attentions of black Africa and the Communist bloc away from Rhodesia to South Africa itself.

Despite Mr. Vorster's denials, evidence on the public record suggests that a weakening of South African support was the key to Mr. Smith's acceptance of the settlement plan.

For 11 years, since Mr. Smith's unilateral declaration of independence from Britain, he has been negotiating on the issue of majority rule without committing himself to the constitutional steps necessary to bring it about. The difference, this time, was that South Africa had told him that it wanted a peaceful settlement.

It told him so diplomatically, at the two encounters Mr. Smith and Mr. Vorster have had since Mr. Kissinger embarked on his effort. On each occasion Mr. Vorster painted a grim picture of a widening guerrilla war in which the Rhodesians would face not only their own black nationalists but the might of the Soviet bloc —possibly including Cuban troops.

The diplomatic suasion would not have been effective, it is widely agreed here, if the South African leader had not accompanied it with a blunt warning that his Government was not prepared to underwrite the effort necessary to prevail in a war. This message, which Mr. Vorster has described as "pointing out the realities" to Mr. Smith, was evidently decisive.

Rhodesia Announces 40 Rebels Have Been Killed in Past Week

SALISBURY, Rhodesia, Sept. 24 (Reuters)—Ten black nationalist guerrillas have been killed by Rhodesian troops in the last 24 hours, a security force communiqué said today.

This brings to 40 the number of guerrillas claimed to have been killed in the last week.

Today's communiqué said troops in the eastern border zone had also found the body of an African bayonetted to death by guerrillas. It said that in other incidents guerrillas destroyed buildings in a tribal trust land, robbed a store and passengers on a bus.

Southern Africa at a Glance

Southern Africa has been an area of rapid and unforeseen political change in the last three years. A summary follows.

ANGOLA

Ruled by Portugal for more than 400 years, Angola was set on the path to independence in 1975 with the establishment of a transitional government composed of representatives of three black nationalist groups and the Portuguese minority. The arrangement proved ineffective as the three nationalist groups feuded with each other. After independence open civil war years, Angola had set on the path to Popular Movement fo rthe Liberation of Angola eventually prevailing with the aid of several thousand Cuban combat troops.

MOZAMBIQUE

The 1974 coup in Portugal brought an end to more than 470 years of colonial rule in Mozambique. An agreement to grant the colony independence was resisted by a group of white rebels, but they were quickly subdued.

On June 25, 1975, the territory became independent. The new Government embarked on a Marxist-inspired program of political and economic reform, which resulted in the departure of all but a few hundred of the 30,000 Portuguese settlers who had chosen to remain.

RHODESIA

Colonized in the 1890's, Rhodesia broke with Britain on Nov. 11, 1965, over the issue of black majority rule. In August 1975 and in March 1976 talks between Prime Minister Ian D. Smith and black nationalist leaders failed. The subsequent diplomatic initiative undertaken by Secretary ... State Henry A. Kissinger resulted ... the agreement announced yesterd...

When pressed at one point, Mr. Rockefeller said he would refer to the Bible: "Judge not, that ye be not judged."

On the election, Mr. Rockefeller contends that when the voters go into the booth "really what we want to know is who do we trust."

Trusting Mr. Ford is the theme to which Mr. Rockefeller repeatedly returns.

Mr. Rockefeller is also philosophical a good part of the time, spinning out maxims acquired in 36 years of public life.

"Government closest to the people is the best government. I really believe in that," he told a television interviewer.

"The essence of the quality of life is respect," he said in an address.

"This country has over-promised and under-delivered for years," he told a rally.

"We want people who love and understand human beings," he said in praise of a local candidate.

On the future, Mr. Rockefeller reminds his listeners that he has served under six Presidents, and that he wants to spend more time with his wife and their two young sons. He also says there are Rockefeller family matters to which he must attend.

He ruled out a place in the Cabinet or elsewhere in Mr. Ford's new administration, should he be elected.

But the Vice President has also been groping for a way to retain a voice in public policy and tells everyone that he is not leaving public life, saying: "I have no worry at all at being able to participate and in serving my country. I am sure there will be ways in which I can be useful."

Rockefeller, Albert Apologize to Brooke

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24 — Senator Edward W. Brooke, Republican of Massachusetts, said that Vice President Rockefeller and the Speaker of the House, Carl Albert, had apologized today for remarks they had made about him yesterday.

Mr. Brooke declined to elaborate on the contents of the apologies, which he said had been made over the telephone.

In an unguarded moment in the House chamber yesterday, the two men spoke of Mr. Brooke near a live microphone that they believed had been turned off. The comments came shortly before an address to a joint meeting of Congress by Dr. William R. Tolbert Jr., President of Liberia.

Mr. Albert said of Mr. Brooke, the only black Senator, "He'd be a slave if he were over there [meaning Liberia]," and the Speaker and the Vice President chuckled.

In a short statement today, the Speaker's office said, He apologized for any statement that might have been embarrassing to Senator Brooke whom he holds in the highest regard."

So concerned was the United States about Soviet diplomatic and propaganda moves that the State Department in recent days orally complained to the Soviet Embassy about it, reporters were told on the plane.

Mr. Crosland's comments were satisfactory to Mr. Kissinger, who came to London last night determined to secure from Britain a guarantee to move rapidly toward black majority rule without protracted procedural and technical debates.

It appears that the first step after Mr. Smith's acceptance will be a meeting between blacks and whites to agree on an interim government.

Mr. Kissinger said that the composition of the negotiating team for the blacks would be up to the Presidents of key black African states. The Rhodesian whites will choose their own negotiators and it was not ruled out that Mr. Smith might remain in power for a while.

Then, the British would pass legislation providing for elections and legal independence for Rhodesia, in contrast to the illegal declaration of independence by Mr. Smith in 1965.

What seemed clear from the remarks of both men, who have been in constant touch, was that they wanted to place prime responsibility on the Africans themselves, white and black, to produce their own negotiated solution. The United States and Britain, however, would be ready to help in supportive roles.

Mr. Kissinger and Mr. Crosland also left the impression that they wanted to avoid any inflexible procedures. It appeared they preferred to be pragmatic about how to bring about the switch from rule by Rhodesia's 270,000 whites to majority rule representing its six million blacks.

Reading Plan Aids Poor Pupils in Chicago

By SETH S. KING
Special to The New York Times

CHICAGO, Sept. 23—Nearly a third of the pupils at the all-black Grant Elementary School in the midst of Chicago's West Side ghetto are reading today at above average levels as a result of a simple though laborious program to persuade their parents to become intensely involved in the children and the affairs of their school.

After a year of Operation Higher Achievement, an effort watched closely by educators seeking methods to improve the learning skills of disadvantaged children, more than 400 Grant pupils had average reading gains of 1.1 years, a month above the national average for a school term.

Grant pupils whose parents did not become involved in the program had average reading gains of only five months.

The majority of the Grant school's children live in the Rockwell Gardens public housing project. Nearly 80 per cent of them are from welfare families, in many of which the mother is the only parent living with them.

'We Had All the Books'

"We had all the books and teaching materials anyone could ask for, and we have an integrated, highly trained teaching staff here," Donald Moran, the principal, explained.

"But we were not getting anywhere, we were not reaching these children, and they were learning at levels below what we knew they were capable of," he said.

"We decided we were failing because there was a home vacuum, and we set out to change that," he went on.

Albert A. Briggs, superintendent of Chicago's District 9, conceived the program and chose Grant as a testing ground because, he said, many of the difficulties in teaching poor children in depressed inner city neighborhoods had occurred in the areas with huge, crowded public housing developments.

"Among the Grant parents there was indifference and even a lot of hostility toward the school," Mr. Moran said. "Many parents felt they weren't welcome here, that our school was an antithesis of their life-styles, that they were of no importance in their children's education. Their children's learning ended when they walked out our doors."

With $7,000 in financial aid from the National College of Education in Evanston, the program was begun in March last year with a three-day workshop at a suburban Chicago hotel where Grant parents, teachers and other educators spent three days discussing goals they wanted for their children. When school opened last fall, the Grant staff held an open house after an intensive promotional campaign in the neighborhood.

"There hadn't been an open house at Grant in years, but to our amazement more than 700 parents came. After that we were on our way," Mr. Moran said.

The parents were asked to sign what Mr. Moran called a "contract." In this, they pledged to encourage their children each day by talking with them, complimenting them, helping them think well of themselves, reading to them, showing them how to care for books, and seeing that they attended school regularly.

The parents who signed also pledged to provide wholesome food, clothing and comfortable housing for the child and provide a quiet, well-lighted area for regular study. And each child signed the contract, with a pledge declaring:

"For all these wonderful things my parent does for me, I shall strive to do my best every day."

The Grant staff prepared a handbook for parents, explaining the rules of the school and steps a parent could take to enhance a student's performance.

A few weeks later, the teachers and staff staged a reading festival at the school. Each of the 500 parents attending was given another guide book, this one giving "V.I.P.'s" (very involved parents) a detailed outline of what their children should be capable of reading and explaining to the parents how they could help a child achieve these skills.

This was followed by a book fair, at which parents were given reading games and books and pamphlets to use at home. Parent-teacher committees were formed to arrange a Bicentennial celebration and to make periodic contacts with parents in their homes.

"We were told from the very start that none of these things had any chance of succeeding without the parents," said Mrs. Dorothy Osborn, chairman of the Grant School advisory committee, the mother of a boy who had been an underachiever at Grant and is now up to the national levels in his reading.

The chairmen of the joint parent-teacher Operation Higher Achievement committees also met to plan open houses, parent-child rallies and festivals, and more book fairs. New contracts have been prepared and will be circulated among the parents.

11 Arrested, 7 Hurt In Racial Incidents At a Boston School

BOSTON, Sept. 24 (UPI)—The police said that at least 11 persons were arrested and seven others were injured today in the worst racial incidents in the city in this third year of court-ordered school desegregation.

Nine white or black students were arrested at Hyde Park High School and were charged in connection with fist-fighting and chair- and stone-throwing. Two other persons were arrested in Boston's Mattapan section and were charged in connection with stoning police officers escorting school buses.

White students and black students were embroiled in "pushing, shoving and fist fights" on the front steps of the school building, a school spokesman said. Seven persons, including two teachers, were slightly injured. Chair-throwing occurred inside the school, the spokesmen said.

Uniformed police officers have been on duty in the school since last week.

Blacks Decided to Go Home

The police cleared nearby streets of a crowd of about 200 stone-throwing white youths before black students could board buses to go home early.

"The blacks were given the choice to either go home or go to classes," said a school spokesman, Tom Loftus. "They decided to go home. The faculty is still inside the school, it wasn't ordered closed."

Classes were reported to be continuing normally at the city's other schools, many of which also have been desegregated by a Federal court order.

A school official said many of the incidents had begun as disagreements, but ended up as racial brawls.

"We always have trouble with that age," Mr. Loftus said, "whether it's over money or girls. Now we add racial fuel to it."

Order for South Boston High

The incidents occurred one day after Federal District Judge W. Arthur Garrity Jr. ordered a halt to the assignment of more students to racially troubled South Boston High School.

"There are enough problems there without adding to the difficulty," he said yesterday. "If the present trend continues, it will create a situation of serious overcrowding and increase the potential for tension, turmoil and all the things the receivership was designed to prevent."

Last December, Judge Garrity issued an order that placed South Boston High under Federal receivership, or control, to protect the safety and rights of black students. Challenged by the Boston School Committee, the order was upheld last month by the United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit.

Floridian Appeals to Kidnappers: Take $200,000 and Return Wife

Associated Press

Richard Jaffa, with his 14-year-old son, Scott, by his side, makes a public appeal for the return of his wife, kidnapped in Jacksonville, Fla. In front of him is a box with money, the ransom he is willing to pay.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Sept. 24 (UPI)—A wealthy real estate developer held a cardboard box containing $200,000 in cash today and pleaded with the kidnappers of his wife to return her safely "because I have the money" and "I've got two children who need their mother."

Fighting back tears, Richard Jaffa, the 36-year-old president of Jaffa Properties, a real estate and construction company, said at a news conference at his home on Jacksonville's South Side, "I have the money, but I want my wife."

Mr. Jaffa said he last saw his wife Sheri Linda Jaffa, 35 years old, the head of a local federation of Jewish women's clubs, around 8:30 o'clock Wednesday morning. "I kissed her before I left for work," he recalled.

He said he received a phone call at 10:15 A.M. at his office and the male caller said "he had my wife and that our car was at a certain location." It has been the only contact he has had with the kidnappers. "He said he wanted money. And he said that harm would come to my wife" if he didn't get it, Mr. Jaffa said.

Referred to Acid

He said the caller made a reference to acid and quoted him as saying, "You know what would happen if this was used on your wife."

The caller told him that the family car could be found in a parking lot at the Beauclerc Country Club. Mr. Jaffa said he went to the club, found the car and drove to his bank.

He was given an hour to raise the ransom, $200,000, and then drive to Green Cove Springs, 35 miles southwest of Jacksonville, for further instructions.

He said he could raise only $50,000 in the time allotted him. At Green Cove Springs, he was directed to look for a note pinned to the back of "a Jesus sign" near a Kentucky Fried Chicken restaurant.

The first note led him on what agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation termed a "scavenger's hunt." The final drop point was in the Ocala National Forest.

Mr. Jaffa said he left the money there Wednesday night with a note explaining why he was unable to raise the full amount and asking for some evidence that his wife was still safe. He returned to the drop point last night and found the money was still there.

Ar[illegible]l of Miller Suffers a Setback
[illegible] Speech at Mine Union Parley

By BEN A FRANKLIN
Special to The New York Times

NATI, Sept. 24—Delegates to [illegible]ntion of the dissension-ridden [illegible]ne Workers union began unex- [illegible]oday to sort out the factions [illegible] been on the attack against Ar- [illegible]ller, the union's president.

[illegible]rbovich, the leader of one of [illegible]ns, was effectively eliminated [illegible]ntial challenger to Mr. Miller [illegible]astrously unsuccessful verbal [illegible]ust the union president on the floor.

[illegible]er's leadership has been threat- [illegible]s fallings-out with a substantial [illegible]f second-level and third-level [illegible]ials and by his loss of political [illegible]er the union's international [illegible]board. But it had been threat- dramatically by Mr. Trbovich, [illegible]ce president and a former ally [illegible]urgent Miners for Democracy [illegible]le movement that brought Mr. [illegible]ower in 1972.

[illegible]ovich, a 53-year-old former [illegible]operator, was the campaign [illegible]r the late Joseph A. Yablonski, [illegible]l leader of the rank-and-file who, with his wife and daugh- [illegible]in in 1969.

the union believe that Mr. [illegible]ought that he, rather than Mr. [illegible]uld have been picked to head [illegible]ist Miners for Democracy tick- [illegible]. Yablonski's death. The two [illegible]een at bitter odds almost since [illegible]control of the union from W.A. [illegible] is serving a life term for hav- the Yablonski slayings.

[illegible]as Mr. Trbovich's day to make [illegible]esident's report. He chose to [illegible]e before the 2,000 delegates [illegible]cinnati Convention Center to Miller of "weak and indecisive [illegible]' a charge with which many [illegible]on fervently agree. But Mr. [illegible]so raised again a discredited some members of Mr. Miller's [illegible]are "socialistic, revolutionary [illegible]mistic."

[illegible]vich said that the staff, many [illegible]nembers are former workers [illegible]rty programs in Appalachia, [illegible]resident like a puppet, a mar- [illegible]be implemented by unseen

[illegible]bovich rose to speak, a num- [illegible]gates shouted for him to sit [illegible]s urged that "we cut out the the campaigning" and that [illegible]ion hall be cleared of the [illegible]e don't display our disunity

[illegible] also a motion that Mr. Trbo- [illegible]ks be stricken from the con- [illegible]rd. But Mr. Miller merely acknowledged the flurry of motions from the floor and none was acted on.

Mr. Trbovich abandoned his prepared text, already distributed to newsmen, but as at least one fistfight broke out on the convention floor, apparently sparked by his rhetoric, he nonetheless dwelt at length on what a Miller aids later described as the vice president's "red-baiting line."

Speaking to newsmen later, however, Mr. Trbovich said that he not only could not prove his "suspicions" that "radicals" had "infiltrated the staff" but changed the thrust of his accusation to direct it at rank-and-file union miners in West Virginia. He accused them of having inspired a recent rash of unauthorized strikes.

"It takes a real bad show to make Arnold Miller look good," one angry delegate stormed at Mr. Trbovich as he left the hall, "but that's what you've just done. You made Arnold look good. You are through."

Mr. Miller had opened today's session with the disclosure of an overnight coal mine fatality—the 391st death in the lines since the last union convention in December 1973.

He had been standing silently at the podium as the rules debate came to an end and, for a moment, had seemed to have lost his voice. Then, after drinking a glass of water, he began reading a note that had just been handed him. He announced to the silent hall that a 21-year-old apprentice miner had been electrocuted at a Hawley Coal Company mine in Bradshaw, W. Va.

After asking for a memorial moment of silence, Mr. Miller introduced Mr. Trbovich.

The major threat to Miller's leadership is Lee Roy Patterson, the executive board member from Madisonville in the western Kentucky coal fields who announced his candidacy three weeks ago. Mr. Patterson who first raised, and also said he could not prove, the "staff radicals" charge a year ago, told newsmen today that everything Mr. Trbovich had said was true.

Later today, Mr. Miller was given support, perhaps unintentionally, by Robert E. Barrett, a former miner who is now the head of the Federal Mining Enforcement and Safety Administration. In a speech, Mr. Barrett not only lashed out at the "excuses, alibis and mythology and misrepresentations" that he said were used by the coal mine owners as a "cover up for the bad leadership and poor management," but also lavishly praised the union's leadership for "strong and effective safety programs to safeguard the life and health of American miners."

[illegible]o enforce the residency law have been thwarted by the court's desire to preempt administrative judgment and by playing both sides of the fence," said Nansi Irene Rowe, deputy corporation counsel for the city.

She said that where city employees had challenged the rulings of arbitration panels or Civil Service Commission officials, courts had loosely interpreted the residency laws in favor of employees challenging the city law.

She gave as one example the case of a city employee who owns a $93,000 home outside the city and runs a small business from his home but claims residency in the city by virtue of the fact that he sleeps with his grandson at the home of one of his children and files taxes with his wife using the city address.

Chicago Costs Called Up

In Chicago, Miss Drake, telling of her search for a city home, said: "The mayor's not raising taxes, but landlords are raising rents. If the rents are reasonable, they hit you some other place, like charging you for utilities. I don't want a glamorous building, but I don't want one that's run down. I want something similar to what I have and I want it on the southwest side near my relatives. And I want a safe neighborhood."

Barry E. Paoli, owner of a real estate company on the northwest side, said that a "phenomenal" rise in home sales right after the mayor's order had waned. He said that a month ago realtors were swamped with city employees looking for homes. The new activity generated price increases of from 7 to 10 percent, he said.

"But the market's down now. The demand was higher than the supply last month. We're still getting inquiries from city workers, but nothing like a month ago," Mr. Paoli reported.

"They're still trickling in but there are more homes available," he added.

Despite the drop in demand, Mr. Paoli said that prices remained at the higher level.

Workers caught in the investigations included a division marshal and a captain in the fire department. The marshal, John Measner, who was with the department for 29 years, resigned rather than move to the city. He termed the hearings comparable to the Nuremberg trials. Mr. Measner, who commanded the fire detail at O'Hare Airport, was two years from retirement.

Domicile or Residence

Frank J. Volpi, a laborer for 17 years with the Bureau of Streets and Sanitation, resigned because he did not want to remove his handicapped son from a suburban school. The family lives in Oak Lawn and the child attends school in Hinsdale. Mr. Volpi, like many other workers, maintained an apartment in the city. But the board made a distinction between a "domicile and a residence," and did not consider maintenance of a city address as meeting the residency requirement.

William E. Cahill, president of the personnel board, said that punishment was not the object of city policy.

"We're not going to fire them because of a matter of days or weeks," he remarked. "This isn't a program of punishment. We're trying to get people to follow what the ordinance says. We know how tight the real estate situation is and we don't expect them to perform miracles."

Meanwhile, the board of education voted 4 to 3 against establishing a residency requirement. Further, several suburban governments have residency requirements that are adhered to without the controversy similar to Chicago's.

President Ford tosses a head of cauliflower to a shopper during tour of the Italian market in Philadelphia yesterday

Press, which interviewed 1,065 persons nationwide.

Although they had all agreed in advance to be interviewed—thus raising the possibility that their observation of the debate may have been unnaturally self-conscious—the A.P. survey appeared to support the contention that neither man had made a breakthrough.

The poll found that 34 percent thought Mr. Ford had won, 32 percent thought Mr. Carter had won, 26 percent considered the contest a draw and 8 percent had no opinion.

The margin of error was such that the Ford figure could have been smaller than the Carter figure. In any event, however, each persuaded about the same number of persons that he had triumphed.

In addition, the poll, which was conducted for the news service by Chilton Research Service in Radnor, Pa., showed that Mr. Ford had gained about four percentage points after the debate, compared with Mr. Carter's two. That put Mr. Carter at 47 percent over-all and Mr. Ford at 45—a difference so small that the race, as pictured in the survey, is far too close to call.

Patrick Caddell, Mr. Carter's pollster, also reported the results of interviews of a panel of 400 voters, which showed the outcome of the debate to be a dead heat. But Mr. Caddell warned that the size of the sample required that the figures be treated with some skepticism.

Perhaps the most bizarre poll was the one commissioned in Chicago by Alderman Roman C. Pucinski, a stalwart in the organization of Mayor Richard J. Daley. Covering more than 400 voters in a solidly Democratic ward, it showed that 70 percent thought the President had won—suggesting either trouble with the sample or trouble for Mr. Carter among the ethnic voters of Chicago's near northwest side.

The reactions from politicians were even more predictably divided along party lines than is customary, with the two Vice-Presidential candidates leading the way.

Senator Walter F. Mondale of Minnesota, the Democratic nominee, said that the debate had convinced him that "any working man or woman who would vote Republican is like a chicken who would vote for Colonel Sanders."

Goldwater on Carter

"When it comes to demonstrating to the American people that he's got it all together, I think the President did that last night," said Senator Robert J. Dole of Kansas, the Republican Vice-Presidential candidate.

Senator Barry Goldwater of Arizona, a conservative Republican, said, "Carter showed such a frightening ignorance of government problems that it is impossible to take him seriously."

Senator Robert P. Griffin of Michigan, the assistant Republican leader in the Senate, said, "Jimmy Carter should plead no contest and go home to Plains."

'Each Firmed Up His Own Votes'

Senator Edward M. Kennedy, Democrat of Massachusetts, thought that "Jimmy Carter made a very impressive showing."

"He demonstrated an extraordinary understanding of basic human problems like jobs."

But the private view of both Republican and Democratic professionals—more than two dozen of whom were interviewed today by telephone—was summed up by a Democratic activist not directly involved in the campaign.

"I think it was a draw," he said. "Ford got so bogged down in numbers that people tuned out. Carter was far less forceful than he should have been. But each scored his points—Ford made Carter look like a waffler and a big spender and Carter made Ford look like a hard-hearted banker—and my suspicion is that each of them firmed up his own votes."

The Ford camp made the greater attempt to portray itself as the night's big gainer, perhaps because the President's backers feel that the momentum is now theirs.

Richard B. Cheney, the White House chief of staff, flatly predicted that within a week or 10 days, Mr. Ford would overcome Mr. Carter in the national opinion polls. James A. Baker 3d, the President's campaign manager, said in a luncheon speech at the Washington Press Club that Mr. Ford had done "a superb job" and had scored "a clearcut win."

Both Mr. Baker and other White House officials argued that the main reason for what they saw as Mr. Ford's success was that Mr. Carter, in their view, had done distinctly more poorly than expected—seeming less combative, less clear and less energetic than they thought he would be.

Carter Too 'Reticent'

The Carter supporters contented themselves by asserting that their man had reached the old-time Democratic voters he needs by his emphasis on jobs. The candidate and the staff conceded that Mr. Carter had started slowly because, in his words, he had been "too reticent" about attacking the President.

But they agreed that he had come back strongly to dominate the second half of the meeting and earn a tie.

Neither side indicated any intention of changing its strategy as a result of the debate. But one Carter aide said that the Democrat's success with the jobs issue showed the need to stick closely to the "basics" that served him well in the primary campaign and to avoid diversions such as the Playboy interview.

Focus Different in the Hall and on the TV Se[t]

By JOSEPH LELYVELD

Special to The New York Times

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 24—The ordeal by camera that President Ford and Jimmy Carter underwent here last night for the benefit of a mass viewing audience demonstrated, if it demonstrated anything at all, how separate and independent a television impression can be from the words that are strung together to create it.

News Analysis

To a listener in the small audience that had been admitted to the balcony of the Walnut Street Theater, the words of the candidates provided a thread—sometimes frayed but still a thread—for the debate. The drama came from the sight of the two rivals isolated, without their retainers and advisers, in the small arena or ring that had been formed by the backdrop of the stage set and the battery of television cameras.

But when the same moments were reexperienced immediately after the debate, with the assistance of a video cassette recorder in a hotel sitting room, the words sometimes seemed to be obstacles to communication by the candidates and the drama was largely filtered out.

Stranded in Media Limbo

The viewers at home did not see an encounter in an arena. They saw two candidates taking turns on an interview program, hardly interacting at all, even when they were stranded together in a state of media limbo by the failure of the sound system.

The tube magnified both what was effective and what was not in the performance of the two men. In Mr. Carter's case, particularly in the early portions of the debate, it left an impression of wordiness.

In the theater, his remarks on unemployment, in response to the opening question, seemed unfocused and not especially forceful. In 1960, John F. Kennedy, who was able to make an opening statement before answering questions, took advantage of the lead-off position to lay down the themes that he then sustained in his encounters with Richard M. Nixon. Even in the theater it was obvious that Mr. Carter was not able to do that.

Carter Swallowing Hard

From the balcony, he looked composed. But the television impression was subtly different: His overly cautious answer momentarily became part of his image. The viewer could see the candidate licking his lips and swallowing hard.

The answer was not merely ineffective; it was difficult to follow and seemed longer than it had in the theater. In his anxiety to avoid "fuzziness," he was leaving an impression of a man giving a hasty recitation of statistics.

A fleeting shot of Mr. Ford, grasping his lectern and staring at his rival, transmitted an image of an impatient combatant. In the theater, where the President could be seen all the time his rival was speaking, he did not look quite so stalwart. It was noticeable, for instance, that when he picked up his pen, he was not really making notes but pretending to do so for the benefit of the cameras.

Shorter Answers From Ford

Still, the first words he said in rebuttal to Mr. Carter sustained the impression that he had been trying to project, for they engaged his rival. "I don't think Mr. Carter has been any more specific on this case than he has been on many other instances," the President said.

He then went on to recite his own set of statistics, but took far fewer words to do so. Speaking much slower than did his opponent—about 30 fewer words a minute, by one count—he nevertheless used less time. His opening response to a question was 30 seconds briefer than Mr. Carter's.

In retrospect, it could be seen that the format put the challenger at an initial disadvantage. But toward the end of the first hour, his rebuttals regularly carried a sting. It was then that he struck his themes on unemployment and tax reform, subjects he had earlier fumbled.

In fact, throughout the debate, the most damaging points scored by both men came not in response to questions, but in rebuttal statements. Obviously, the candidates felt less constrained at these times.

Mr. Carter's most effective moment came in his closing statement—after the 27-minute break—to an audience that had very likely been reduced substantially. In the theater, this seemed to be one of his weakest statements, a mumbled reprise of old campaign themes. But the political reality was not in the theater. It was on the screen.

The question of who "won" and who "lost" naturally preoccupied politicians and journalists. But it may not be the right question to ask.

Narrow Ford Victory?

In particular, it may not be the question the voters ask themselves. If the emerging verdict being shaped by the pollsters and reporters is that the President won narrowly in what was generally regarded as a dry and spiritless exchange, respect for Mr. Ford may rise significantly.

But does that necessarily mean that he succeeded in luring away many of his rival's potential supporters?

That question is unanswerable today. But it is at least possible and may even be likely that Mr. Carter also [accom]plished his main goals in the e[...] to demonstrate that he has a secure [grasp] of key issues and to position [himself on] those issues in a way that wo[uld] force the judgment of voters [...] way.

Memorable Moments

Some of the most memorable m[oments] of the debate, as a television eve[nt, were] not caught at all by the audience [in the] balcony. At a point in the third [round] of questions, Mr. Ford was briefly [shown] glaring at Mr. Carter as his rival [talked] about the bureaucratic "mess" in W[ash]ington.

In the 10th round of questions, [the can]didates were shown together at a m[oment] when Mr. Ford was leaning forward [and] gesturing emphatically. He was [at] that moment, however, making [one of] his most effective points. Some[what la]boriously, he was contending [that it] would be "contrary to one of the [basic] concepts of our system of gover[nment,] a system of checks of balances," [to have] a Democratic President and a Dem[ocratic] Congress.

Mr. Carter may have looked [less im]pressive in that instant, but he m[anaged] to slash back with a sharply w[orded] statement on "government by stal[emate"] in which, implicitly, he compared [Mr.] Ford unfavorably to former Pre[sident] Richard M. Nixon who had been, [he said,] "a strong leader, at least."

In that moment, at least, the c[andidates'] partisan appeals may have had m[ore im]pact than the contrast of images, [even] on television.

Mr. Ford's campaign aides were [con]vinced that he looked and sounded [more] Presidential. Mr. Carter's said he [had] gained points by standing up to a P[resi]dent. But there was little to show [that] the incumbency of the first Preside[ntial] debate an opponent was important [in the] encounter, one way or the other.

Two Equalizers

The viewers saw only two men. In [one] sense, television was a great equal[izer.] The sound failure was an equalizer [in] another sense. Presidents and Preside[ntial] candidates normally ride with sirens [and] motorcycle escorts to insure that [they] don't have to wait for anything. But [there] they were, for all the nation to see, [alone] with their thoughts like ordinary ci[tizens] caught in a traffic jam.

This morning on N.B.C.'s Today s[how] Marshall McLuhan offered a varia[tion on] his best-known dictum. The medium, [he] said, had revolted against the mes[sage.]

The candidates are to meet again Oct. 6—on these same stations, as radio announcers used to say. [The] size of the audience then will be a be[tter] index than the polls of how useful [view]ers found the first round of the deb[ates] last night.

Ford Confers at the White House With President-Elect of Mexico

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24 (AP)—President Ford met today for the first time with Mexico's President-elect José López Portillo, in what the White House described as "very warm and cordial" talks.

The White House statement said they discussed narcotics cooperation, trade, a possible agreement allowing prisoners to serve out their sentences in their country of origin, and illegal immigrant workers.

They also exchanged views on "matters relating to hemispheric and international affairs," the White House said.

The hour-long meeting in the Oval Office was followed by a small informal dinner for Mr. López attended by Mr. and Mrs. Ford and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger.

A Faulty 25-Cent Part Identified as Culprit That Silenced the Debate

a relatively simple telecast from the Walnut Street Theater in Philadelphia.

Not until hours later, well into yesterday morning, were they able to discover what had gone wrong. In one of the 24 amplifiers used by the network in handling pool coverage for other broadcasters, a single humble electronic part—a tube of foil paper and chemicals, known as an electrolytic capacitor—had stopped functioning.

Its failure was compared by Philip J. Levens, director of television operations for ABC, to a burned-out Christmas tree light that shuts off the entire strand—the kind of strand whose guilty light cannot be found without replacing each bulb one by one.

"We have had capacitor failures before, but never on this scale—never when it has knocked out a whole distribution system for anything so important and for that length of time," Mr. Levens said.

"We were terribly frustrated, unable to find out what went wrong. It took us hours to localize it, and it wasn't until we performed an autopsy—on someone's theory that it might be a capacitor, after eliminating lots of other possibilities—that we found the culprit."

"It was like blowing a main fuse and having all the lights go out," Mr. Levens said.

He noted that the network had taken the precaution of having a backup for every piece of equipment on hand, including a battery-operated power supply in case of a power failure.

"But this was a unique problem," Mr. Levens said. "What we didn't have was a spare distribution system to send the audio to all the different users."

Filters Out the Hum

A capacitor, which was called a condenser in the early days of electronics, was described by Mr. Levens as "two pieces of foil and one layer of paper impregnated with chemicals rolled up tightly." Its purpose is to filter out the hum in the power supply.

ABC, which was in charge of the technical pool for the first Ford-Carter debate, was able to restore the sound by arranging another means of distributing the audio signal to the 17 different points that the network was obliged to serve. Those included the various other television networks and independent stations, the radio networks and stations, the public-address system in the theater and the closed-circuit system for the press.

The audio signal could be restored because the faulty capacitor was in one of the relay amplifiers and not in the main broadcast "feed." ABC routed the main signal from Philadelphia to New York and then sent it out to most of the 17 users by the telephone lines of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company.

To accomplish this, ABC hooked an audio line to a CBS truck, which sent the audio signal to the CBS broadcast center in New York. From there it was relayed to the telephone company.

The loss of the audio signal brought the only major drop-off in viewing during the debates, although television audience researchers point out that it occurred about 11 P.M., when viewing normally drops sharply because it's bedtime for much of the audience.

The total audience for the telecast—that is, persons who watched six minutes or more—may exceed 85 million viewers when the national Nielsen ratings are tabulated, the researchers indicated. Those ratings are expected on Monday.

Based on the overnight ratings for Chicago, New York and Los Angeles, network researchers have estimated the national audience for the confrontation of the candidates at 65 million viewers an average minute.

In the New York area, the first half hour of the debates, beginning at 9:30 P.M., had an audience of close to 56 percent of all television households. During the third half hour the rating was 53.3 percent, indicating that most viewers stayed with the broadcast on ABC, CBS, NBC or PBS and did not tune out for entertainment on the other channels.

Big Drop in New York Area

But at 11 o'clock, the rating had diminished to 44.2 percent in New York.

In Chicago, the drop was not so severe when the sound was lost. The combined rating for the debate was 69.8 at 9:45 P.M., and 62.6 at 10:15.

In Los Angeles, where the debate began at 6:30, the rating went up steadily as the evening progressed and reached a peak at 8 P.M., while the wait was on for the sound to return.

Facts and Statements in Debate Conflicted on Several Occasio[ns]

By DAVID E. ROSENBAUM

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24—On several occasions in their joint television appearance last night, President Ford and Jimmy Carter misstated their facts, exaggerated their claims and avoided answering questions with which they were uncomfortable.

Mr. Carter, for instance, contended that there were fewer people working today in private, nonfarm jobs then there were when Mr. Ford became President and that Mr. Ford had vetoed more bills than any other President since the Civil War. Neither of those statements is true.

According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, there were 78,661,000 persons employed in private, nonfarm jobs in August 1974, when Mr. Ford took office. In August 1976, the most recent month for which statistics are available, there were 79,431,000 persons working in such jobs.

On the matter of vetoes, Mr. Ford has vetoed 52 bills in his two-year Presidency. Franklin D. Roosevelt vetoed 635 bills in 12 years, and Harry S. Truman vetoed 250 bills in eight years.

Ford Erred on Tax Saving

For his part, Mr. Ford declared that under his tax proposal, which was rejected by Congress, a family of four would have had $1,000 more to spend each year. On another matter, he said that the Government was spending only $3.5 billion annually for education. Neither of those statements is true.

The tax proposal about which Mr. Ford was talking would have raised the personal exemption from $750 to $1,000 a year. The additional $250 per person could have been usd by taxpayers like any other deduction — to lower the amount of income on which their taxes are paid—and could not have been subtracted directly from the amount of taxes due. The saving to a family of four would have been $140 a year in the lowest tax bracket and $700 in the highest.

As for the education expenditures, Mr. Ford's own budget for the current fiscal year lists spending for education at $7 billion, and that figure includes only the expenditures for the Office of Education and not that by other agencies.

While the misstatements of figures might have ben unintentional, some other statements were clearly exaggerations.

A Question of Numbers

Mr Carter asserted at one point that, on a train trip through Pennsylvania last week, he had asked an audience of "about four or five thousand people" how many were out of work. According to Mr. Carter,"About a thousand raised their hands."

Reporters who were with Mr. Carter on that trip said that the only crowd of that size that he encountered was in Harrisburg and that, when he put the question, no more than a couple hundred people at the most raised their hands.

Mr. Ford argued that the Nixon and Ford Administrations had "taken 10 million taxpayers off the tax rolls." In fact, that many people have been relieved of paying taxes because of several legislative actions that permitted some poor people to stop paying taxes. However, most of those actions were taken at the instance of Congressional Democrats, in large part over the objections of Republican Administrations.

On another issue, Mr. Ford said that total employment in the country had risen by four million in the last 17 months. That is true enough. He was counting from March 1975, the low point of the recession. Since he took office in August 1974, the increase in the number of people working has totaled only 1.8 million.

Mr. Ford also seems to have exaggerated when he said that Gov. George B[usbee] of Georgia had, when he took over [the] Governor's mansion from Mr. C[arter,] "found the Medicaid program of Ge[orgia] in a shambles." The implication [to] the President was that the problem [was] Mr. Carter's fault.

In fact, Governor Busbee was [com]plaining about the administration [of] Medicaid not at the state level b[ut at] the national level.

Both candidates regularly used questions by reporters as jump[ing-off] points for broad descriptions of [...] and failed to answer many questions [di]rectly.

Mr. Carter, for example, fielded a q[ues]tion about whether nuclear power [plants] were "unsafe" by giving a long des[crip]tion of what he hoped to accompli[sh in] the entire area of energy policy. A[t the] end of his answer, he mentioned the [need] for strict nuclear safeguards, but he n[ever] said whether he thought existing p[lants] were safe.

No Explanation Forthcoming

Moreover, despite questions th[at in]cluded statistics to the contrary, [Mr.] Carter never explained how he hop[ed to] raise enough money through ending [tax] advantages to enable lower-and mi[ddle-] income taxpayers to realize a reduc[tion] in taxes.

Similarly, Mr. Ford did not directly [ad]dress a question about how, if he pla[nned] to give increased revenues stem[ming] from an improved economy back to taxpayers in the form of reduced ta[xes,] he would pay for his proposed initia[tives] in health, housing and recreation.

Early in the debate, there was a [dis]agreement between Mr. Carter and E[liza]beth Drew of the New Yorker maga[zine,] one of the questioners, about how m[uch] additional revenue would become [avail]able if unemployment were substa[ntially] reduced.

Mr. Carter insisted that, by the [end] of the next Presidential term, there w[ould] be an extra $60 billion if the ra[te of] unemployment were reduced to the [level] of 4 or 4.5 percent. He said his f[igures] came from projections by Congress[ional] budget committees.

Same Panels, Different Numbers

Mrs. Drew, who said her inform[ation] had come from the same committees, [con]tended that the saving would be [...] $5 billion and that Mr. Carter's pro[posed] programs would cost between $85 b[illion] and $100 billion.

Budget experts in Congress said [...] that Mr. Carter's figure was accurate, [ass]uming there was no decrease in [...] But the experts noted that an unem[ploy]ment rate of 4 percent was high[ly opti]mistic, and that with a weaker eco[nomic] recovery, the saving would be consi[dera]bly less.

Mr. Carter never disputed the q[uestion]er's estimate of the cost of his pro[grams] and conceded that he might have t[o cut] back on the rate of implementati[on of] new programs in order to accom[plish] a balanced budget."

Billy Carter Turns Debate Off Early

PLAINS, Ga., Sept. 24 (AP) —Billy Carter said he was too busy and not interested enough to watch his brother, Jimmy, debate President Ford on television—but he changed his mind and watched the first few minutes of the show.

Billy Carter, who runs the family peanut business here, took a few minutes last night to relax in front of a portable television set with a cup of iced tea.

He watched the first exchange of questions between the two candidates, then went back to work.

"I don't care anything about the debate," he had said earlier. "I'm too busy with my peanut business."

The warehouse has been especially busy in recent days with loads of harvested peanuts arriving for processing.

Jersey School Pact Reached

POINT PLEASANT, N.J., Sept. 24 (AP) —A tentative agreement has been reached to end the school dispute in this Ocean County community. Representatives of the teachers and the school board agreed yesterday on a new contract, but withheld details pending ratification. The dispute had centered on wages, fringe benefits and teachers' demands for binding arbitration to settle grievances.

Experts Question Quick Polls Taken on Debate

By DEIRDRE CARMODY

The Ford-Carter debate had been under way for only one hour and five minutes Thursday evening when telephones began ringing in households all over the country. The callers were interviewers for the Roper polling organization, and the ringing telephones signaled the start of the great national temperature taking, as Americans were asked for their opinion about the outcome of the debate.

In 1960 there were 31 polls to assess the impact of the debates between Richard M. Nixon and John F. Kennedy. It is not possible to guess how many will be taken this year, but the rush to the starting gate came Thursday as the Roper organization completed a poll of 336 persons by 11:18 P.M., and the Associated Press polled 1,065 persons within 90 minutes of the end of the debate.

The phenomenon raises a number of questions about the effect of such instant polls.

The two polls produced quick bulletins on radio and television and made headlines the next day. Both polls showed President Ford winning the debates by a slight margin, but some experts questioned whether the polls were valid. They also questioned whether the studies accurately reflected the national reaction and whether they have any impact.

"I would doubt very much that the polls will have an impact because, by and large, the people who pay attention to this kind of poll are those who are already so well informed or so committed that the results won't affect them," said Warren Miller, director of the Center for Political Studies at the University of Michigan. "I would totally discount their impact, and I would be almost equally willing to discount their credibility."

Opposite View Taken

There are others who disagree, however, and who believe that no matter how flimsy the poll, the constant reiteration on the air and in newspapers that one candidate leads in the polls does affect voters. A Ford campaign aide, for instance, made up the following story to illustrate the importance of having the President declared a winner:

Mr. John Q. Public and his wife are watching the debate on television. Afterward, she turns to him and asks him who won. He replies Carter; she thinks Ford. The next day, they pick up the newspaper and it shows that let us say, 53 percent of the American people think that Ford won. She says to her husband, "See I was right." He agrees.

There are those who believe that a real assessment of the impact of a debate cannot be made for at least 24 hours. Thus the announcement of an instant poll itself affects the reaction, it is said.

"Opinion on a debate comes from first, hearing the debate; second, hearing the public talk about the debate, and third, people talking to each other," says Warren Mitofsky, director of the election and survey unit at the Columbia Broadcasting System. "The real question is not about the event of watching the debate, but what the effect of the debate is. The word 'win' is a media term and is an elusive word. The ultimate purpose of a debate is not to win, but to get more votes on election day."

The Associated Press poll was begun a week ago when 1,500 households were called, and the occupants were asked a number of questions about their political attitudes. They were also told that they would be called Thursday after the debate, a fact that some pollsters say makes the viewer unrepresentative of the general public because he is expecting to be questioned.

Margin of Error Noted

Of the 1,500 persons reached last weak, 1,065 were included in the poll after the debate. Of these, 34.4 percent said that they believed Mr. Ford had won the debate; 31.8 percent favored Mr. Carter; 26 percent believed neither had, and 7.8 percent were undecided.

Experts say that in a sample of this size, there could be a margin of error of plus or minus three points for each candidate. This could mean, conceivably, that 31 percent believed Mr. Ford had won and 34 percent believe Mr. Carter did, an exact reversal of the figures stated in the poll.

The Roper poll, which was conducted for public television stations in Washington, D.C., found that of 336 persons, or 39 percent believed that Mr. Ford had "done the best job' and 31 percent believed Mr. Carter had beaten Mr. Ford. Burns Roper, president of the Roper Organization, said that the margin of error on this size of a sample would be as high as 5.5 points.

"I realize that," Mr. Carter began his answer. "If you read it, it says that after the final session was over this was an analysis that was made after the completion of the interview." He said his reference to Mr. Johnson had been "about misleading the American people" during the Vietnam War and "the lying and cheating part referred to President Nixon."

"And the unfortunate juxtaposition of those two names in the Playboy article grossly misrepresents the way I feel about him [Mr. Johnson]," Mr. Carter said. "The only culpability or blame that I placed on Johnson in my interview was that during the war the American people were not involved in an accurate understanding of the conflict."

Pressed by Journalists

"Who made the unfortunate juxtaposition" a journalist called out as the press conference ended and Mr. Carter walked away. The Democratic standard bearer did not answer, but his press secretary, Jody Powell, said, "He did."

Several newsmen pursued Mr. Carter to inquire whether he was implying that he had not uttered the controversial remarks. Was the "analysis" of which spoke his own, he was asked.

"It was my analysis," Mr. Carter said. "It was an unfortunate juxtaposition for which I have apologized. It was a mistake. I thought the interview was over, as a matter of fact."

Mr. Powell later told newsmen on Mr. Carter's plane that this final remark did not mean that Mr. Carter had been unaware that the Playboy interviewers were continuing the tape recording when Mr. Carter spoke the words in question.

Mr. Carter spoke to a large audience in a downtown Houston street, repeating in modified form many of the economic arguments he had employed against President Ford in the first debate.

He added an extemporaneous remark—"I would never raise the taxes of working people"—which may have been an attempt to offset Republican assertions that he had "contemplated tax increases for some less-than-rich taxpayers."

Mr. Carter later spoke in Dallas, again mostly on economics, before flying to San Diego, Calif., for the night. In Dallas, he told an audience, "I recognize myself the unbelievable contributions of Lyndon Johnson to our country, to the downtrodden, to the poor."

Mrs. Carter Sees Victory

By MARJORIE HUNTER
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24—Rosalynn Carter indicated today that she had a few tense moments when her husband, Jimmy, appeared nervous in the opening minutes of his debate last night with President Ford.

"But I just completely relaxed after the first few minutes," she said, "because I felt he was in complete command."

Despite her husband's shaky beginning, Mrs. Carter said she believed that he won the debate.

"I thought that Jimmy came out ahead and I'm one of his severest critics," she said at a news conference in the Carter-Mondale storefront headquarters in downtown Washington this afternoon.

Presidential Debate Scored Low Rating in a Cleveland Bar

By WILLIAM K. STEVENS
Special to The New York Times

CLEVELAND, Sept. 24—From the start there was no shortage of clues as to what President Ford and Jimmy Carter were up against in trying to impress the patrons of Johnny's Bar, deep in Cleveland's Fifth Ward: an urban melting-pot of 22,000 people, where the local economy depends on the steel mills in the valley and the auto plants across town, where the mixture of ethnic cultures is rich and tangy, and the Roman Catholic Church strong, and the Democratic Party overwhelmingly dominant.

Up in the balcony of the split-level bar, a man and a woman sat in close conversation. At the other end of the room, four more people clustered in equally uncaring privacy.

This is another in a series of articles on voter attitudes in four American communities—urban, small city, suburban and rural—that will appear from time to time during the 1976 campaign.

In the middle, by the TV set, was a third group of about six—some of them tough, frequently profane working men in their 30's and 40's, smilingly congenial among themselves and friendly to visitors, but caustic, skeptical and disillusioned about politicians. Their political mood this year generally appears to reflect that of the whole Fifth Ward.

This group was about to pay attention to the debate, and most of its members left no doubt about how hard to please they would be, and how little impressed they were by either Mr. Ford or Mr. Carter.

"Neither one has showed me anything," said Tony Nicholas, a 33-year-old locksmith, Vietnam veteran and lifelong Democrat who now considers himself essentially an independent. "I might not even vote. If you brought [John F.] Kennedy back today, he'd win in a landslide over these two punks. Boom!—blow 'em out."

Usually a Democratic Ward

On form, the former Georgia Governor ought to be strong in Ward Five. The ward has voted solidly Democratic as long as anyone can remember, even when Richard Nixon was winning in other blue-collar wards. And Mr. Carter took 46 percent of the Fifth Ward vote in his sweep of Ohio in last June's Democratic Presidential primary, against 26 percent for his nearest rival, Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona. He must run well in such neighborhoods if he is to win this critical state in November.

But even as the debate began, there was evidence that the "softness" in Mr. Carter's vote that had been here all along had spread since June. Bud Camlin, a foreman at Reliable Spring, said that people in the factory were worrying increasingly that "Carter's not explaining what he's going to do." Many, he said, would not vote in November.

It took less than 10 minutes—long enough for each candidate to deal with the first question on economics—for the basic opinion to form.

"What's he said?" Mike Smith, a 31-year-old schoolteacher and also a Vietnam veteran, asked after Mr. Carter's first answer. "He's not said anything."

Neither, in the dominant view, did Mr. Ford in his first go. Fifteen minutes into the debate, one of the bar's "heavy" but now absent habituée, a city police captain, telephoned with his assessment.

"I just got it from the main man," yelled Ken Peskura, a 40-year-old truck driver, father of four and a Democrat, "We put them both in a bag and gas them." Everyone laughed.

President Ford, at least in the beginning, seemed to project the better image to some. "He seems a lot more poised," said Mr. Nicholas. Mr. Carter, he said, "looks very fatigued and drawn out."

The question of taxes came up and tempers rose. "Everytime that s.o.b. blinks his eyes," Mr. Peskura said, nodding his head in the President's direction, "I got to fill out of one of these." He flung on the bar what appeared to be a form for an income tax statement.

The question of the Nixon pardon arose. "You gave him a pass, pal," Mr. Nicholas all but snarled at Mr. Ford. "You should have stuck it in his ear, Republican or not. That's when we lost respect for this Government you got.

"I think I'm going to go," he said soon. "They bore me. They super-bore me. If they had a couple of go-go broads up there—but I've got to go fix locks. That's more important than this."

Bud Camlin, who had been watching quietly but intently, left after about an hour. He said that although he had been leaning to Mr. Carter when he came in, he was now undecided. "He's saying what should be done, but he's not saying exactly what he's going to do," Mr. Camlin said of Mr. Carter.

As the end drew near, Bob Hedler, the Republican, denounced at length what he perceived as a drain of middle-class taxes toward the unemployed that would take place should Mr. Carter win the election. He seemed sure that Mr. Ford had won the debate.

Mike Smith and Tony Nicholas agreed that both candidates had talked over the public's heads. "Who knows what gross national product is?" Mr. Smith complained. "We all have a pretty good idea, but what exactly does that mean?"

"I don't even have a good idea, Mike," said Mr. Nicholas.

"Federal Reserve Board," scoffed Mr. Smith. "I can see the poor housewife and the stiff in the steel mill saying, 'Boy, that's a good issue.'"

The President, Mr. Smith said, probably came out least worst, over all, because he had seemed to be in better command of facts and figures.

And then the network equipment malfunctioned and the sound went off.

"Great," Mr. Smith grinned sarcastically. "Just as they were about to talk about trust in government."

"Good," blurted Tony Nicholas. The absence of talking by the two candidates was "the best thing that could happen," he said.

Man Killed in Jersey Crash

BRICK TOWN, N.J., Sept. 24 (UPI)—Thomas Burnett, 24 years old, of Brick Town was killed and a passenger in his car was injured critically today in a highway crash. The passenger, Mark Cividanes, 21, of Howell Township was admitted to Point Pleasant Hospital in critical condition. The police said the car had run off a road on a curve and struck a tree as the men headed home from a tavern.

OLD AND NEW Classical America is an organization that usually is hot on old and cool on new. Its members appreciate the classical, ornate lines of architecture that bespoke dignity and a majesty of purpose or a graciousness of living. That's why tomorrow's Sunday tour at 2 P.M. is a bit out of their line. It's entitled "They Can Build 'Em the Way They Used To," and it will start with an inspection of the new addition to the Frick Collection, at 70th Street and Fifth Avenue. The Frick controversially demolished a town house some time ago to build a garden, a wall and a new addition. The guide there will be John Bayley, who worked on the change and apparently did so in a way to soothe Classical America. After the inspection, the tour will go on to look at other Fifth Avenue mansions. Admission: $2. Information: 279-9863.

NOTE: The street party of the West 75th Street Block Association, originally scheduled for tomorrow, has been postponed to Saturday, Oct. 9.

Sitar Recital by Nikhil Banerjee Is an Evening of Rarest Pleasure

By JOHN ROCKWELL

Nikhil Banerjee's first recital here in five years at CAMI Hall was an evening of the rarest pleasure. This was sitar playing of the most poetic, technically dazzling sort imaginable, and lovers of Indian music should try to hear Mr. Banerjee's second New York recital, tonight at 8 at the U.T.O. Theatrical Center, on the second floor of 597 Broadway, near Houston Street.

Mr. Banerjee was born in Calcutta in 1931, and had already attracted a good deal of attention as a youthful virtuoso before he retired for seven years to study with Allauddin Khan, Ali Akbar Khan's father and the teacher of both his son and of Ravi Shankar.

Mr. Banerjee toured here between 1967 and 1971, but was overshadowed in the popular imagination by the more flamboyant Mr. Shankar. Now his playing has blossomed to the point of absolute mastery.

Wednesday's concert was laid out in Indian proportions, totaling three and one-half hours. As always, the music was built upon ragas (melodic patterns) and tals (rhythmic cycles). Mr. Banerjee (accompanied throughout on the discreet tamboura by Mira Turnbull), began with Raga Puriya Kalyan and continued after the intermission with Raga Kafi Sindhura (switching at the end from Rupak Tal to Deepchandi Tal to Teental, and eventually to Raga Abhogi). His tabla player was the excellent Zakir Hussain, who is the son of Alla Rakha, another noted virtuoso.

As in most Northern Indian music of the past generation, the slow, introductory alaps were a time for an introspective exposition of the particular characteristics of the raga. The gats that followed were faster and more rhythmically lively, highlighted by playful interchanges between the soloist and the tabla player.

Mr. Banerjee's opening alap and the first half of the concluding gat especially moved this listener. Puriya Kalyan is a devotional evening raga, and Mr. Banerjee evinced a striking ability to express emotion through oranamentation and shadings of pitch. Kafi Sindhura is characterized as a "romantic and longing" raga, and Mr. Banerjee captured that mood not only in the alap, but in the gently rocking beginning of the faster gat as well.

From a purely technical standpoint, two aspects of his playing seemed particularly special. One was his active left hand, which moved at enormous speed over the long expanse of his sitar's fingerboard to produce brilliant octave jumps in climactic passages.

The other was his command of ornamentation. The melody on the sitar is articulated over its twanging drone with sharp attacks, which decay quickly into mellow sound. A great sitarist can shape and twist these fading echoes to expressive ends. Mr. Banerjee's microtonal elaborations of the principal notes were quite remarkable in their complexity and in their directionality, always floating with serene assurance toward the next note. In other words, Mr. Banerjee's technical skills are always at the service of the music—as with any great artist on any instrument.

Dance: Painter Link Is Revived

The simultaneous artistic event was a feature of many avant-garde dance concerts of the 1960's. Actors would do a playlet side by side with dancers who were performing an independent dance work of their own. Occasionally, an artist such as Robert Rauschenberg would paint while Merce Cunningham's Company would dance. In a few instances, the collaboration was fruitful, but for the most part nothing of note was accomplished. The continuance of the painter-dancer tradition into the mid-70's by Barbara and Tom Gardner in their work "Yes" was somewhat of a surprise at the Construction Company Studio on Thursday evening.

He daubed at four large panels, while she performed impromptu variations based on the music of Cigarette, a group of musicians, who were in another room. Rock dancing made an appearance, as did more traditional forms of theater dance. It seemed harmless enough and even probably fun to do, but the musicians were the real directors of the show and did not suggest any particular structure to the dancer, who just reacted to the moment. At best, it was inconclusive, like the spontaneous gestures one might make listening to the radio.

DON MCDONAGH

Old Jazz Stars Brought to Mind By Dick Hyman

Scott Joplin, Jelly Roll Morton and even James P. Johnson have become such standard sources for contemporary jazz traditionalists that a program called "Jelly Roll, Joplin and James P.," which started the fifth year of Jack Kleinsinger's "Highlight in Jazz!" series on Wednesday evening at New York University's Loeb Center Auditorium, seems to suggest a pleasant but unadventurous concert.

But with Dick Hyman in charge and at the piano, with a band consisting of Pee Wee Erwin, trumpet; Vic Dickenson, trombone; Johnny Mince, clarinet; Milt Hinton, bass, and Bobby Rosengarten, drums, it was a stimulating and often revealing experience. Some of the revelations came from Mr. Hyman's exploration of Joplin pieces that have not been taken up by the jazz or pop worlds. "Aunt Dinah Done Blow De Horn" from "Treemonisha" combined the warmth of a New Orleans blues in Mr. Mince's low-register clarinet with a bright, swinging ensemble, while Mr. Hyman's adaptation of "Heliotrope Bouquet" for an ensemble featuring Mr. Mince on alto saxophone was an interesting idea that missed only because it needed more rehearsal.

Mr. Hyman's versatility was constantly in evidence, sometimes in unexpected ways, when he played Mr. Johnson's "Old Fashioned Love" as though he had Art Tatum in mind, at other times capturing the stylistic essence of both Mr. Johnson and Mr. Morton. But the most consistently enlivening member of the group was Mr. Mince, whose clarinet added a bubbling sense of joy to all the ensembles.

Carrie Smith joined the band to sing several numbers that were enhanced by the appropriately colorful backing of Vic Dickenson's gently growling trombone.

Ted Curson's Septet Plays With Jubilant Power

By JOHN S. WILSON

It has been a long time since a jazz band with as powerful and liftingly exuberant an attack as Ted Curson's Septet has been heard around town. The group first set back New Yorkers' ears last Spring, doing a month at the Tin Palace as well as dominating one of the programs at the Newport Jazz Festival in July. Now that Mr. Curson is back from his customary summer European tour, the group is at Boomer's, 340 Bleecker Street, through tonight, playing with an even tighter ensemble feeling than before—and that simply increases the jubilant power of its attack.

The foundation of Mr. Curson's septet is a rhythm section that roars, built around the eruptive drumming of Steve McCall, whose heavy, insistent beat comes straight out of Art Blakey. Dave Friesen's bass, positive and extraordinarily full-bodied, is a vast, rich carpet of sound for the horns to work over, while Andy Laverne on piano and Sam Jacobs on congas add an insistent percussive effect.

Over this, Mr. Curson, playing trumpet, piccolo trumpet and fluegelhorn; Chris Woods, on alto saxophone and flute, and Nick Brignola, on soprano and baritone saxophones, weave bristling ensembles and solos that are constantly being given added impetus by long passages of breaks and jabbing background riffs.

The band has its mellow moments when Mr. Brignola can display the rich, lush sound of his baritone. He "fills" his horn in the tradition of Gerry Mulligan and Harry Carney, and Mr. Curson floats out some mellow tones on his fluegelhorn. But the essence of this band is excitement — clean, precise, urgent ensembles and solos, both treated with more imagination and variety than one normally expects from a hard-driving band such as this.

His life as an artist was virtually over. Only two minor items survive from the later years.

The exhibition that Michael Klein, assisted professor of art history at the University of South Carolina, has organized for the Hirshhorn Museum consists of 27 works. Most of them are now of historical rather than artistic interest. The early academic pictures are here—mainly nudes and portraits, including a small self-portrait from around 1905 that shows Covert, in high collar and rimless glasses, to have been a rather prim, good-looking man in his 20's. There are some curious transitional pictures, too, produced just prior to Covert's abstractions, and some sad symbolic pictures, produced just after.

What the exhibition really hangs on, however, are the three or four abstract pictures that Covert made in 1919—"Brass Band," "Time," "Vocalization" and, perhaps, "Ex Act," although the last is not quite in the same class as the others. These are extraordinary pictures — abstract collage-constructions, composed of such materials as upholstery tacks, painted string, wooden dowels and plywood, conceived in the euphoric atmosphere of the Dada spirit, much indebted to Duchamp, yet very austere in their detached formality.

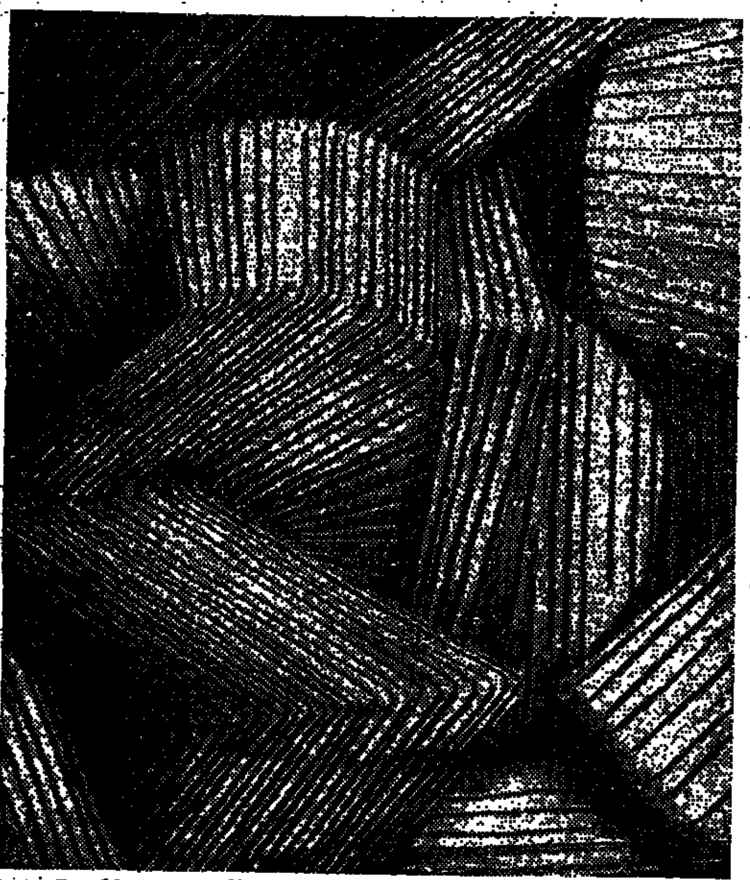
There was nothing quite like these pictures in the American art of the time, and they still look fresh and inventive today. They adumbrate a whole realm of abstract construction that it took years—decades, really—for American art to catch up with. They stand today as classics of the modern movement, a guarantee of Covert's permanent place in the history of modern art.

It is unusual for an artist to win so secure a place in that history on the basis of such a small production, but this is John Covert's distinction. It is these few pictures that justify the labor of historical research that Professor Klein has undertaken on behalf of this almost-forgotten figure. Covert's was not a "big" career, but it was one that tells us much about the American art of his time, and we can only be grateful to the Hirshhorn Museum for recalling us to its importance.

The exhibition remains in Washington through Nov. 14.



"Brass Band," a 1919 oil and string composition board by John Covert, is in the exhibition at the Hirshhorn Museum and Sculpture Garden. "Still fresh and inventive today"

Mrs. Isaac Stern
"I get personally involved"

Born in Germany in 1927 of Russian-Jewish parents, Vera Lindenblit left with her family as Hitler came into power. She immigrated to Sweden, then France and finally, in 1947, to the United States. "I was working at the United Nations when the question of the Mideast partition came up," she recalled. "After living in Europe during the war and not knowing what each day would bring, it was extraordinary to find myself in a job at the heart of deciding the fate of what I believed in. There was such a feeling of hope for the future that I had to take the next step."

Whirlwind Romance

With trunks crammed with musical programs and journals full of observations on the concerts she had attended in New Yrk, the young woman left for Jerusalem in 1951. She had been there 16 days when she went to an Isaac Stern recital and met Mr. Stern by chance. They were married two and a half weeks later.

"We left right away on tour, and he decided I had too many belongings so he went through them," she recalled.

"We found many programs for his concerts. There was a concert he hadn't liked, and when we opened up my diary to that entry, I had written 'wonderful.' It was a good way to start a new life."

The young bride who had dutifully studied piano as a child—"'Für Elise' was my piece," she admits—spent her honeymoon at the Casals Festival in Prades, Spain, with her husband, and Mr. Schneider, Eugene Istomin and Pablo Casals. Her own public career began in 1957, when she was asked to be chairman of a luncheon for the women's division of the Israel Bonds campaign. The prospect terrified her.

"I was flabbergasted and almost said no, but they said they'd teach me. They taught me! I overcame my shyness and haven't been able to retire since," she said, throwing her hands up in mock dismay.

A good part of Mrs. Stern's energy has been devoted to the America-Israel Cultural Foundation, an American organization founded in 1938 to encourage the arts in Israel. It provides visibility for Israeli graphic arts and writing in this country. Membership dues support three programs: the awarding of individual scholarships for study throughout the world to artists livin gin Israel, whether Israeli or Arab; the funding of institutions like the Israel Philharmonic, and the creation of mobile cultural units to bring the arts to outlying areas of Israel, encouraging indigenous art forms and introducing new ones in the process.

There are boundaries even more difficult to bridge, however, and although Mrs. Stern is active in fund-raising and membership development for the foundation, the task that may lie closest to her heart is making artists feel at home in a strange country, whether the United States or Israel. "I get personally involved," she said briskly, "whether it's toothaches or emotional problems." The Stern family is an extended one that includes Shira, 20 years old, Michael, 16, and David, 13, as well as Rondo Capriccioso, a bounding golden retriever, and any visiting artist in need of home comforts.

Ford, Carter Alma Maters Compete in Football Today

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.

Gerald Ford's alma mater is playing Jimmy Carter's alma mater in football today—Michigan against Navy—and there aren't many Democrats, or anyone else, for that matter, who will bet much on Carter's team. But if the game ends as expected, with Michigan winning in a rout, Carter may find it a happy omen.

Only once before has a football game been played between the alma maters of two major Presidential candidates just before the election. The eventual winner of the election had graduated from the college that lost that football game. Only two other football games have been played between major candidates' alma maters in a Presidential election year. Both these games were played after the election.

Wolverines Proud of Backfield

All three of these "candidates" games were played in 1912, when there were three major Presidential aspirants: Woodrow Wilson the Democrat; Theodore Roosevelt of the Progressive, or Bull Moose, Party, and William Howard Taft, the Republican incumbent. Wilson had graduated from Princeton, Roosevelt from Harvard and Taft from Yale.

Harvard beat Princeton, 16-6, Nov. 2, 1912, just three days before the election, which Wilson, the Princetonian, won. Yale and Princeton tied, 6-6, Nov. 16, 1912, and Harvard finished an undefeated and untied season by beating Yale, 20-0, Nov. 23, 1912.

President Ford should enjoy today's "candidates" game even though, as Commander in Chief, he is also the boss of the Navy. Some Wolverine fans are saying that theirs is the best backfield in college history. It is much too early for that assertion, and, besides, Michigan has made it for previous backfields: the point-a-minute-team backfield of Neil Snow, Willie Heston and company in 1901 and the Tom Harmon-Forest Evashevski combination of 1939. How many of these "best" backfields does Michigan want?

Still, George Welsh, the Navy coach, has said, "This is the best offensive backfield I've ever seen." Welsh was the offensive-backfield coach at Penn State when the Nittany Lions had Franco Harris and Lydell Mitchell.

The current Michigan backfield is, of course, good. It consists of Rick Leach, a sophomore quarterback; Harland Huckleby, a sophomore halfback; Jim Smith, a senior wingback; Rob Lytle, a senior fullback, and Russell Davis, a sophomore fullback. When Davis, the fifth man, enters the lineup, Huckleby usually rests and Lytle moves to halfback. The team has scored 91 points in two games, against Wisconsin and Stanford, and Navy has little but desire with which to make a game of this one, at Ann Arbor, Mich., against the No. 1 team in the nation.

Army, which has seen a couple of its graduates move into the White House since the first intercollegiate football game in 1869, is up against as difficult an assignment as Navy faces today. The Cadets, who beat Lafayette after a good fight and just managed to pull one out against Holy Cross, play North Carolina today. The Tar Heels have one of the nation's finest running backs, Mike Voight. But the Cadets have the nation's No. 1 receiver in Clennie Brundige and the nation's No. 3 passer in Leamon Hall. These two will probably be quite busy at West Point's Michie Stadium.

Those schools that started the whole Saturday madness 107 years ago—Rutgers and Princeton—meet for the 67th time today, at Palmer Stadium in Princeton, N.J. The Scarlet Knights should win. But they were expected to win last year, when Princeton did, 10-7. Rutgers has a good quarterback, a good defense and two good victories in two starts.

MIDWEST
*Cincinnati (1-1)	Miami, Ohio (0-3)	13-21	Miami of Ohio, spawning ground of coaches, off to worst start in history.
†Illinois (2-0)	Baylor (1-1)	——	Bob Blackman's Illini doing amazing things, such as beating other teams.
Kansas St. (1-1)	Wake Forest (1-2)	17-16	This is what Deacons need week before having to play Mich. Wolverines.
Michigan (2-0)	Navy (1-1)	——	With 91 points in two games so far, Wolverines could have 182 after this.
Minnesota (2-0)	Western Mich. (2-0)	38-0	Gophers and Broncos have same records but aren't quite in same league.
Nebraska (1-0-1)	T.C.U. (0-2)	56-14	T.C.U. has two victories in two years with little chance of change.
Northwestern (0-2)	Notre Dame (1-1)	7-31	Irish must defeat someone impressive to get back among football's elite.
Ohio State (2-0)	Missouri (1-1)	——	Missouri produces one major upset a year has already had one for 1976.
Oklahoma (2-0)	Florida St. (0-2)	——	This sort of thing could make Bobby Bowden wish he remained at West Va.
Purdue (1-1)	U.S.C. (1-1)	6-19	Ricky Bell should be good for 100 yards or more against Boilermakers.
*Toledo (0-2)	Ball State (2-0)	28-38	Ball State and Rutgers share long winning srteaks with nine in a row.
Wisconsin (1-1)	Wash. St. (0-2)	——	A couple of lesser lights in the Big Ten and Pac-8 meet in Madison.

Arkansas (2-0)	Tulsa (2-1)	31-15	Golden Hurricane is a mere zephyr when it travels in this fast company.
*No. Texas St. (1-2)	S.M.U. (1-1)	——	North Texas gave Texas Longhorns scare, so Mustangs have hands full.
*Texas A&M (2-0)	Houston (1-1)	——	Could make Houston with it had not been admitted to Southwest Conf.

*Night game. †TV game.

Barzilauskas of Jets Out With a Broken R[ib]

By GERALD ESKENAZI

The Jets discovered yesterday that the nagging pain in Carl Barzilauskas's side was a broken rib.

Thus, it is likely that the front four, which has produced no quarterback sacks in two games, will be reduced to a three-man defensive line for tomorrow's game against the Dolphins at Miami.

Barzilauskas, the New Yorkers' most massive player at 6 feet 6 inches and 265 pounds, may miss more than the Miami game. He could also be out for the contest at San Francisco the following Sunday.

The defensive left tackle cracked the rib during last Sunday's game at Denver, a game that perpetuated the diabolical work opposing quarterbacks have been doing against the Jets.

In two games they have completed 64.1 percent of their passes. They have produced an efficiency rating so high that it goes beyond the 100 percent mark the National Football League considers a perfect score. The quarterbacks rate out at 107.6, when factors such as touchdowns and yards and attempts are totaled.

The injury to Barzo means that half the regular four-man line is out. Billy Newsome is being replaced at defensive left end by Lawrence Pillers. The only other available lineman would be another rookie, Larry Faulk.

Holtz May Change Formation

Since Coach Lou Holtz is unlikely to want two rookies to play in front of two rookie linebackers, he might go to a 3-4 line.

This would place Pillers at left end, Ed Galigher as the "nose guard" or middle man, and Richard Neal at right end.

The Jets would then employ four linebackers instead of three. They have tried this on passing downs with mixed success. It is a tricky arrangement, with many clubs able to run against a three-man front.

This was supposed to be the Dolphins' new set-up in the wake of last week's loss to New England. But the injury to Nick Buoniconti, a linebacker, may shift Miami back to the traditional arrangement.

Since Don Shula took over as the Dolphins' coach, he has been able to master temporary problems. That is why 16 of the 25 clubs he has faced as the Dolphins coach since 1970 have never beaten Miami.

The only clubs to beat them [in] that span have been Baltimore, C[leve]land, Dallas, Houston, New E[ngland], Oakland, Philadelphia, Washington [and] the Jets.

The game at the Orange Bowl [is] Miami's home debut this season. Shula's clubs have lost at home four times while winning 42 games.

Meanwhile, the Giants wi[ll ...] their remarkable stretch agai[nst ...] off teams by facing the Rams [in Los] Angeles. That will be followed [by con]secutive weeks by games again[st the] Cards, the Cowboys, the Vikings [and] the Steelers.

The Rams are good homers under Coach Chuck Knox, who [took] over in 1973. They have lost only [...] regular-season games at home [while] winning 19.

Knox and Shula are the two [most] successful coaches in the pro[s ...] worst records Shula has produced [...] Miami were 10-4 won-lost marks, [the] first came the first year he took [over] a club that had been 3-10-1. La[st year] he also produced that mark [with a] team that had lost its top run[ner, its] top receiver and several of its defensive players.

Shula's winning percentage, [with]out ties, is 77.7. That is higher [than] any other coach who had been [in the] N.F.L. for 10 years.

Knox took over a Rams' team [that] had won six games and led the[m to] a 12-2 mark. His overall winning [percentage] is 81 percent. The Jets and Giants [have] a combined 1976 record of 0-4.

Richardson, Oehmig G[ain] Final in Senior Golf

DENVER, Sept. 24 (AP)—John [Rich]ardson of Laguna Niguel, Calif., [and] Lewis Oehmig, former champion [of] Lookout Mountain, Tenn., advance[d to] the final round of the United S[tates] Golf Association Senior champi[onship] with semifinal-round victories tod[ay].

Oehmig, the 1972 winner, def[eated] Carl Schmidt of Akron, Ohio, 2 a[nd 1, and] Richardson, who at 55 just mad[e the] tournament's minimum age re[quire]ment, defeated Charles Hightow[er of] Duluth, Ga., 1-up.

The two will play an 18-hole [final] tomorrow on the 6,550-yard, [par ...] Cherry Hill Country Club course.

Jackson Hurls 5-Hit Shutout As Yankees, Tigers Divide

By PARTON KEESE
Special to The New York Times

DETROIT, Sept. 24—After having been shut out by 3-0 in the first game of their doubleheader with the Detroit Tigers tonight, the stumbling New York Yankees had 28 minutes to assess a situation that was growing embarrassing.

Their Eastern Division lead had been cut to 7 games, the smallest since July 2. Their losing streak had reached six, their largest of the season. Their offense had been reduced to four runs scored in 44 innings, and they were without an extra-base hit in 41 innings. Worst of all, the combination of Yankee victories and Baltimore Oriole defeats that would mean the clinching of the division title remained at 3, where it had been stalled since last Sunday.

Whether it was the law of averages, a basic fight for survival or frustration, the Yankees came back in the second contest and pounded out an 11-hit, 8-0 victory—Grant Jackson's first complete game since 1970 and his first shutout since 1969.

Martin Holds Meeting

[As the Yankees split with Detroit, Wayne Garland of Baltimore shut out the Red Sox, 3-0, Friday night for his 19th victory. Details on Page 17.]

With the Orioles winning tonight, the split brought the Yankees within a victory of clinching a tie for the Eastern Division championship.

"We had a short meeting between games," said Manager Billy Martin of the Yankees, "but I won't tell you what we said. No, it didn't have anything to do with champagne. We're not playing for champagne. In fact, I'll take Coke or a scotch and soda if we win this thing."

After Dave Roberts, the Detroit lefthander, had held them to five singles in the 100-minute opener and the Tiger batters had unleashed five extra-base hits against Ken Holtzman of New York—led by Rusty Staub's 14th homer—the Yankee express got going in the second inning of the second game with Otto Velez's ground-rule double.

Quickly, Greig Nettles singled him to third, Willie Randolph walked, Fran Healy doubled for two runs and Fred Stanley singled in another.

Rivers Returns With Hit

Rolling along in the third inning, Lou Piniella doubled, Velez walked and Nettles parked his 30th homer into the upper deck of Tiger Stadium for three more runs and a 6-0 lead.

"I just wanted to win," said Jackson. "I knew we had to win, and when we got those three runs in the second, it made it easier. I was hoping to go at least seven innings, but the cool air kept me going."

Mickey Rivers marked his return to the Yankee lineup after missing nine games with a bruised left shoulder by singling in the fourth. After Roy White walked, Thurman Munson got into the spirit of things with a run-scoring hit—only his second safety in his last 19 times at bat.

The victim of the first six runs was Jim Crawford, a left-hander who has one victory this season, a 3-1 triumph over the Yankees. He left after Nettles's homer, taking his seventh defeat with him.

Jackson, whose won-lost record, 7-1, is the opposite of Crawfords, said he couldn't remember his last complete game. After his performance tonight, Martin indicated that the left-handed Jackson, normally a long-relief man, might start another game against Cleveland.

"Everybody would rather be a starter than a reliever," Jackson said. "That's where the money is."

A starting pitcher with the Philadelphia Phillies in 1969 when he completed 13 games, Jackson was traded to Baltimore in 1971, where he was to remain for more than five seasons until the Yankees obtained him last June with Holtzman, Doyle Alexander and Elrod Hendricks.

"When I joined the Orioles," Jackson said, "there were three or four 20-game winners on the staff. You don't buck that kind of talent, so I had to

Nets Start Hard Training At Camp in Westchester

By PAUL MONTGOMERY
Special to The New York Times

PURCHASE, N.Y., Sept. 24—Down by the elms on the rolling acres of the Manhattanville College campus here, the women's field hockey team went through the stately saraband of afternoon practice. In the gym at the top of the hill, the New York Nets—large men in a small place—strained to prepare for their first season in the National Basketball Association.

This was the first day of training camp for the Nets, a morning and afternoon full of conditioning drills, two-on-one fast breaks and "suicides"—headlong bursts up and down the hardwood floor.

In the pauses, the players sprawled on the benches, sucking desperately for some Westchester County air. Bill Campion and Mel Daniels, two big centers looking for work, toweled away rivulets of sweat. Nate Archibald bent over and held his sides.

Rich Jones, the Nets' starting forward alongside Julius Erving, panted up to the water fountain, barely able to speak. "My mother always told me to be a doctor," he said with a long sigh.

Erving and Hughes Absent

As expected, Erving and Kim Hughes, the starting center, were not present for the workouts. Both announced this week that they were seeking renegotiation of their contracts and would not report to camp until the financial matters were settled.

Bill Melchionni, who talked to both players yesterday in his new role as assistant to Roy L. M. Boe, the Nets' president, said there was no progress in the negotiations. Boe has said that he will not renegotiate any contracts.

Erving, the team's star and one of the league's premiere attractions, has four years left on a seven-year, $1.9 million contract. His salary this year would be $230,000, and he would earn as much as $67,500 more in incentive bonuses. He has said that Boe promised him a renegotiation as soon as the Nets joined the N.B.A., which happened this summer. Boe denies any deal.

Hughes, a rookie last year, came to the Nets from San Antonio in September 1975 in a trade. The Nets took over his three-year San Antonio contract, which has two years to run. According to Richard Sorkin, Hughes's agent, the salary of the 24-year-old center is Only 32 years old, Roy White has already established credentials that will surprise casual Yankee historians who don't put him up there with the glorious names of the past. gotten much publicity," Roy White was saying have the power to hit 30 home runs, but I can steal 20 bases but not 50, and I've hit .290 four

And he's never been on a first-place team before. Of all the players on the Yankees since they won their first pennant in 1921, Roy White has been their longest-suffering player. He joined the Yankees in 1965, the season after their last pennant. But that year they dropped to sixth place. They finished 10th and last in 1966, ninth in 1967.

"It was kind of unbelievable," he recalled. "All the big names were still around—Mickey Mantle, Roger Maris, Elston Howard, Joe Pepitone, Bobby Richardson, Clete Boyer, Whitey Ford, Mel Stottlemyre—I was amazed I was there. I remember Mantle sitting around after a game with everything quiet. Nobody could believe it."

And nobody could believe it in 1968, when Roy White replaced Mickey Mantle as the Yankees' cleanup hitter.

'A Good Run Production'

"The other teams were walking Mickey a lot, so Ralph Houk decided to hit Mickey third and me fourth," Roy White said. "That way, Ralph was hoping they'd have to pitch to Mickey more. I wasn't really a cleanup hitter but I had good run production for somebody who didn't hit 30 or 40 home runs. Ralph always said nice things about me, like I was "the Hank Aaron of his ball club," and that made me proud. But two years ago Bill Virdon made me the designated hitter. I didn't like that. Other teams think you can't play anymore. You can go out of this game quick."

After that 1974 season, Roy White was almost traded to the Montreal Expos.

"I think the Expos wanted Mike Wallace and me," he said, "but the Yankees couldn't decide whether to take Mike Torrez or Steve Renko along with Bob Bailey, and the Expos decided to trade Torrez to the Orioles instead. That killed the deal."

He was returned to left field last season, and when Billy Martin took over as manager, he felt secure. He usually bats second now.

"I fit into Billy's mold," Roy White said. "I have speed, I'm a base-stealer, I'm a switch-hitter, I'm able to move runners along—things that are very important the way Billy Martin manages. Some people say I don't throw like Reggie Jackson, that I'm not a good outfielder. But playing the outfield isn't just having an arm. If you don't throw accurately, if you have bad hands, if you don't know where to play the hitters, an arm's not going to help you much."

Roy White's search for appreciation has been as intense as his search for his favorite omelette.

"Chicken livers, onions and mushrooms," he said. "There aren't many places you can get it. My wife makes it for me at home, and on the road I can get it in Oakland and Milwaukee, but that's about all. There's a restaurant in Milwaukee with good omelettes. Our last trip there I had a prime rib omelette with diced potatoes. Omelettes are great. You can do anything with them."

"Are you," a man asked, "an omelette hallplayer?"

Roy White smiled. "I guess maybe I am," he said.

Fezler Shares A Stroke Lead With Miller

NAPA, Calif., Sept. 24 (AP)—Forrest Fezler rallied from four strokes off the pace with a solid 68 today and tied Johnny Miller for the second-round lead in the $175,000 Kaiser international open golf tournament.

"If you're playing well, you can beat anybody—Miller, Nicklaus, anybody," Fezler said after his four-under-par effort on the North Course at the Silverado Country Club had given him a share of the one-stroke lead at 135.

Miller, winner of this tournament the last two years, had threatened to run away with it again when he opened with a North Course-record 63 in the first round. But he had to work hard in the gorgeous, early-fall weather to match par 72 on the 6,602-yard South Course today.

"I'm a little hot," said Miller, winner of two American titles and the British Open earlier this year. "I threw away so many shots out there I feel like I should have missed the cut. I played good enough to shoot 68 real easy. I just made some mental errors. You feel like you can't shoot 72 on the South Course and have a chance of winning. But my score was so good yesterday that it will offset it.

"If I'd been playing Johnny Miller today, I'd have lost by four strokes."

Mrs. Young Leads by 4 Shots

CALABASAS, Calif., Sept. 24 (AP)—Donna Caponi Young, combining positive thinking with a "home course advantage," carded her second straight 69 today to gain a four-stroke lead after two rounds of the 72-hole $205,000 Carlton Ladies Professional Golf Association tournament.

Her total of 149, six under par, gave her a comfortable lead over Debbie Austin, an opening-day co-leader who had a second-round 74 for 142. Pat Bradley was a stroke back of Miss Austin with 69—143. Susie Berning, who had shared the first day lead with Miss Austin, struggled to a 77 today.

Tropical Storm, $69.80, Wins Rich Jersey Trot

By MICHAEL STRAUSS
Special to The New York Times

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J., Sept. 24—Tropical Storm, belonging to the famous old harness-horse establishment now operating as the Arden Homestead Stable of Goshen, N.Y., created a stir at the Meadowlands tonight by capturing the $94,000 Beacon Course Trot, for 3-year-olds.

At the Race Tracks

A crowd estimated at 19,000 thought so little of the chances of this son of Floris that it sent him to the post as a $69.80-for-$2 outsider. Finishing second, beaten to the wire by 2¼ lengths, was Steve Lobell, competing as an odds-on- favorite with Quick Pay, a stablemate. Quick Pay was third.

Ralph Baldwin, a member of the sport's Hall of Fame, held the reins on Tropical Storm and kept him in the lead for the entire mile. The winner's time was 2:00.

"I'm aware that Tropical Storm, in winning tonight in 2 minutes, has caused a big surprise," said Baldwin. "He hasn't done well in recent races. Last week, however, we discovered the colt had some gravel in the left front foot. We now are convinced that was causing the problem."

Steve Lobell Impressive

In finishing second, Steve Lobell, who came home 2¾ lengths in front of Quick Pay, showed that he had not lost his speed despits his collapse, from heat exhaustion, after his success in the recent, four-heat Hambletonian.

The son of Speedy Count is in the running for trotting's triple crown, since he also was the victor of last July's Yonkers Trot. Only the Kentucky Futurity remains. Tonight he was in contention for most of the trip. But Baldwin, in having his trotter set the pace, got by with some easy fractions for a mile track—30 seconds for the quarter and 1:29 3/5 for the three-quarters—and this helped Tropical Storm's cause.

"I thought we had a shot at the elader as I approached the final turn," said Billy Haughton, who drove Steve Lobell. "But I had a 'dead' horse in front of me, and then I had to go three-wide awter hitting the stretch. It proved a little too much to ask from my horse."

Steve Lobell had given Haughton, his trainer and driver, considerable concern after having scored the Hambletonian success. Called upon to participate in four grueling heats before clinching the victory, the colt collapsed in his stall after he had cooled out.

"He was dehydrated," said Murray Siegel, one of his oawers. "It was felt that the only thing that could save him was to keep him on his feet. As many as 10 horsemen at a time helped to do this. Everyone felt that if the colt went down again he wouldn't get up."

At Yonkers . . .

Horses bred in New York State will compete in a series of four Sires Stakes next week. The series will begin Tuesday night when six filly trotters will compete in The Aldine, an event for 3-year-olds. The purse is $39,475.

Heading the field are Dribydal and Lucky Lady Kash. The former, owned by Phil Tully's Woodstock Stud Farm and Lou and Mildred Resnick of Ellenville, is the 5-2 morning line favorite. She will start from post No. 2 with Bob Compes driving.

Sires Stakes racing continues on Wednesday with the James A. Farley Pace for 3-year-old fillies. On Thursday, a trot for 3-year-old colts and geldings will be featured. Friday's race is also for 3-year-old colts and geldings.

Nijana, Jorge Velasquez in the irons, winning the eighth race at Belmont

At Belmont . . .

W. Haggin Perry's Revidere and Rokeby Stable's Ivory Wand, the unbeaten 3-year-old fillies, and Mrs. Bertram Firestone's Optimistic Gal make up part of the impressive cast today for the $100,000 added Beldame.

Nine fillies and mares, competing under weight-for age conditions, have been named for the 38th running of the one and one-eighth mile race. The event continues the current meeting's championship aspects. Its outcome is cetain to have a bearing not only on the 3-year-old filly crown but also the handicap mare honors.

At Batavia Downs . . .

A dispute between the Genesee-Monroe Racing Association, operator of the track, and the Western New York Harness Horsemen's Association has been settled. The disagreement revolved about management's plan to close the track on Monday nights. Management said it didn't want to compete for customers with the televised football games because the betting dropped off on Monday nights during 1975.

Kingman opened with a Boisclair beat out a bunt to the left of the plate. A wild throw by George Mitterwald, the catcher, allowed the runners to take an extra base.

Burris retired John Stearns and Roy Staiger on short flies to right, then walked Bud Harrelson intentionally to pitch to Seaver. But he uncorked a wild pitch that allowed Kingman to score before getting Seaver on another fly to right.

After fanning four Cubs in the first two innings, Seaver was touched for a pair of runs in the third. With one out, Rick Monday singled and Pete Lacock doubled down the third base line. After Larry Bittner was hit by a pitch, Jerry Morales drove in two runs with a sharp single into left field. Seaver escaped further trouble, feeding a double-play ball to Manny Trillo.

Kranepool Ties Score

The Mets tied the score half an inning later when Ed Kranepool lined his ninth homer over the left-center field fence.

Seaver ran his strikeout total to seven by fanning Burris and Monday in the fifth, but then the Cubs struck for a quick tally. Lacock singled to left and scored on a triple into the right-field corner by Bittner that Kingman could not handle cleanly. Morales then flied to left, but the Cubs held the lead.

After Seaver had left for a pinch-hitter, the Mets tied the score in the eighth. Felix Millan doubled and took third on a sharp hit to right by Kranepool. Kingman drove in the tying run on a checked-swing single that fell halfway between first and second bases.

But Leon Brown, running for Kranepool, was picked off second base and, after Boisclair was intentionally walked, Stearns fanned and Staiger grounded into a force play.

Sept. 24 (AP)—Greg le scored Bobby Tolan aking run in the fifth e Philadelphia Phillies went on to beat the Montreal Expos, 9-3, in the first game of the National League East doubleheader tonight.

Tolan began the inning with a double to right field, and after Jay Johnstone struck out, Luzinski delivered his hit that snapped a 3-3 tie. Luzinski advanced on a single by Dick Allen and scored on Mike Schmidt's sacrifice fly.

The Phil's took a 2-0 lead in the second, and Montreal tied it in the third on a two-run triple by Earl Williams.

Mayer Upsets Villas, 6-3, 6-4, In Coast Tennis

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 24 (AP)—Sandy Mayer of Mendham, N.J., and John Lloyd of England pulled off major upsets today in the third round of the $125,000 Pacific Southwest open tennis tournament.

Mayer defeated second-seeded Guillermo Vilas of Argentina, 6-3, 6-4, and Lloyd recorded his second straight upset by eliminating Stan Smith, 6-4, 3-6, 6-4. Lloyd had defeated eighth-seeded Roscoe Tanner yesterday; Smith was seeded ninth.

Vilas did not appear sharp against Mayer, who was seeded only 16th. He double-faulted four times in the ninth game of the final set when Mayer broke his service to take a 5-4 lead. Mayer held his service and recorded the biggest upset of the five-day-old tournament.

Arthur Ashe, the 1975 winner, had to go three sets before eliminating Byron Bertram of England, 6-3, 6-7, 6-2. Raul Ramirez of Mexico, seeded No. 5, defeated Billy Scanlon of Corpus Christi, Tex., 6-1, 6-3, and Dick Stockton beat Marty Riessen, 6-4, 6-1.

Ali Concludes Training By Sparring 9 Rounds

Muhammad Ali, the world heavyweight champion, and Ken Norton, the challenger broke camp yesterday and headed for New York City for the final preparation prior to their 'rubber match' in Yankee Stadium on Tusday night. Ali sparred nine brisk rounds at his Concord Hotel camp in Kiamesha Lake, N.Y., going three rounds with Rodney Bobick, Randy Stephens and Jimmy Ellis, and joked briefly with Jackie Tonawanda, a woman boxer, who also sparred with Ellis.

Norton didn't do any sparring at his camp 16 miles away at Grossinger, but he did do some bag punching, rope skipping and bade farewell. As the 11-man crew packed his 56 pieces of luggage, he said: 'It's been a long haul. I'm anxious to get at it. I know I'm ready and I'm really gonna punish him. I'll go as hard as I can for as long as I can, which will be 15 rounds if necessary."

The South Carolina basketball coach, Frank McGuire, who was hospitalized on Wednesday with a bleeding ulcer was transferred from intensive care to a private room yesterday. However, a spokesman for the University said the 60-year-old McGuire, a former St. John's coach, would remain in the hospital for some time, although he continued to improve.

Miffed because Charles O. Finley, the Oakland A's owner, released salary terms for signing his five unsigned players to the press, Jerry Kapstein, the players' bargaining agent said yesterday that he had halted all negotiations with Finley. Kapstein, representing Joe Rudi, Don Baylor, Gene Tenace, Rollie Fingers and Bert Campaneris, said there had been no actual figures on the table since April.

Niki Lauda of Austria increased his lead in this year's driving championship race from 5 to 17 points over James Hunt of Britain without driving a mile. The International Automobile Federation (FIA) disqualified Hunt as the winner of the July 18 British Grand Prix yesterday, giving the victory to Lauda. However, they rejected an attempt by Lauda's team Ferrari to reopen judgment on Hunt's victory over Lauda in the Spanish Grand Prix. Hunt's team McLaren was fined for its car being too wide in that race, but the victory allowed to stand.

Colin Dibley of Australia has been unseated from his throne as the fastest server in the world. Scott Carnahan, a young California tennis pro, established himself as the fastest by taking first prize and $5,000 in Tennis Magazine's third annual Cannonball Classic in Los Angeles with a serve clocked at 137 miles an hour. Dibley tied for second place with Chris Sylvan of Fresno, Calif., at 129 m.p.h. They earned $1,750 each. Gene Malin of North Hollywood and John Feaver of England tied for fourth at 128.

The Washington Bullets yesterday denied a report that their top draft choice, Mitch Kupchak, a 6-foot-9-inch star center for the United States Olympic team, had signed a contract to play in Europe rather than the National Basketball Association. According to Mark Splaver, a spokesman for the Bullets, he doubted the report because Kupchak's agent[Larry Fleisher]"is on the West Coast and I understand will not be back until tomorrow. That's one reason he did not sign with us this week, because his agent was not here."

Meanwhile in Italy, the Fernet Tonic team of Bologna, said Kupchak, a collegian at North Carolina, had agreed to a one-year pact to play for them at a reported $120,000. Kupchak, from Brentwood L.I., couldn't be reached for comment because he was out shopping, but his mother, Mrs. Harry Kupchak, reached on the telephone, also doubted that her son had signed with anyone.

Cards Defeat Pirates, 10-8

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 24 (AP)—Mike Tyson slammed a three-run, inside-the-park home run in the second inning, helping the St. Louis Cardinals to a 10-6 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates in the first game of a doubleheader tonight.

The Cards' triumph, after four consecutive losses, damaged the Pirates' chances for catching the first-place Philadelphia Phillies in National League East.

Pittsburgh, which absorbed its fifth defeat in the last seven games, had jumped on Bob Forsch, 8-10, St. Louis starting pitcher, for two runs on two walks and two singles in the opening inning.

Two Pirates errors in the bottom of the inning helped St. Louis cut the deficit to 2-1. Then, Tyson connected for his home run after Keith Hernandez and Hector Cruz opened the second inning with singles off John Candelaria, Pittsburgh starter, 15-7.

Pittsburgh's Willie Stargell and Craig Reynolds pounded homers off Forsch, who restricted the Pirates to six hits. Five Pittsburgh errors accounted for three St. Louis runs.

Padres' Jones Notches 22d Victory

ATLANTA, Sept. 24 (UPI)—Randy Jones notched his 22d victory with two innings of relief help from Butch Metzger tonight while pitching the San Diego Padres to a 6-4 triumph over the Atlanta Braves.

Jones picked up his 22d victory—most in the National League—in his third attempt when the Padres scored three runs on three hits and an error in the eighth inning before Metzger came on to earn his 15th save. Jones has lost 14.

Rigney's Decision to Leave Job Revives Guessing on Successor

debuts, and Kuehl has already been dismissed.

On the other hand, 12 managers—half the total number—were men who had managed elsewhere in the majors before getting their present posts. Rigney and Billy Martin (Yankees) were in their fourth tours of duty, and five others were in their third—Williams (dropped in midseason by the Angels), Bill Virdon (Houston), Dave Bristol (Atlanta), Gene Mauch (Minnesota) and Paul Richards (brought back by the Chicago White Sox after 15 years out of uniform).

Many baseball men have observed, "a manager is hired only to be fired." But it is also remarkable that so many are fired only to be rehired.

The champion is Bucky Harris, who was made a manager eight separate times. He was hailed as a "Boy Wonder" when, as a 27-year-old second baseman, he led the Washington Senators to a pennant in 1924 as player-manager and won again the next year. He moved on to the Tigers, Red Sox, back to the Senators and the Phillies before he won again, with the Yankees in 1947. In the 1950's he went back to the Senators and then to the Tigers again.

Dykes, once a third baseman, managed six teams, and was part of the only trade on record involving managers. In 1960 he had the Detroit Tigers and Joe Gordon was managing the Cleveland Indians when, in midseason (Aug. 3), they changed places, a brilliant maneuver arranged by Frank Lane (general manager of the Indians) and Bill DeWitt (Tigers). Perhaps coincidentally, both Lane and DeWitt moved on to new teams at the end of that season.

No less than 15 men have been given four or more teams to manage just in the last 50 years, and a total of 33 have been given at least three chances in that time. Dressen and Rogers Hornsby were five-timers.

Mayo Smith, after managing the Phillies and Reds, went to work for the Yankees around 1960 as one of the first "super scouts", assigned to look at other major league teams before they came to play the Yankees, then an innovation. No one could get him to define exactly what it was a "super scout" scouted. But in 1967 he became manager of the Tigers (and won the World Series with them the next year) and the answer became plain: a "super scout" scouts for the next managing job.

Vigorous Drills Mark Opening Of Nets' Camp in Westchester

$37,000 a year. Sorkin says this is the lowest on the team.

Melchionni said the salary figure was "not completely accurate, but close." The minimum salary in the N.B.A. this season is $30,000, and the average salary for an N.B.A. player last season was a little more than $100,000.

The fledgling executive, who played guard with the Nets last season, said one way out of the impasse might be to offer Hughes provisions for incentive bonuses.

Both Erving and Hughes are subject to fines for their holdout. By agreement with the N.B.A. Players' Association, the maximum fines are $100 for each missed practice, $250 for each missed exhibition game and one eighty-second of the player's annual salary for each game missed in the 82-game regular season. The Nets' first exhibition game is next Thursday night, against the Knicks at the Nassau Coliseum, and their regular season starts in Oakland, Calif., against Golden State on Oct. 22.

Who Is the Swami?

By PRANAY GUPTE

SWAMI. By Doug Boyd: Random House. 330 pages, $10.

One of the noteworthy exports of India in the last decade or so has been what an American writer has wryly called the "swami business." Swamis, or holy men—and these gurus are always males, no one really knows why—have flooded the West, especially the United States, with a thousand varieties of mysticism and philosophy. Their messages have been devoured enthusiastically by millions whose consciousness has been marinated in a culture that seemingly puts matter over mind, success before spirit. The swamis who traveled to the West have been amply rewarded, not just by the worshipful adulation of devotees but also, in some well-publicized instances, with gifts of jewels, cash, even yachts and jets.

Small wonder then that the swamis have spawned caricatures in the popular mind. The mad swami, with flowing beard and robe, with penetrating eyes and thickly accented metaphors spewing from his mouth, is a special favorite of the satirist and of the comic-strip cartoonist.

But who is the swami, really? What is behind the chants, the beards, the saffron robes, the powerful joss sticks, the elliptical truths? This is what Doug Boyd sets out to explore in his intriguing book. Swamis are truly a cosmic subject; to cut through the myriad of spiritual sects and then to comprehend the philosophies underlying them is a Himalayan task. Mr. Boyd, the author of the previously critically acclaimed "Rolling Thunder," seems to have scaled the heights creditably.

Rich With Detail

They could have been slippery heights and Mr. Boyd's efforts could easily have become pedantic and heavy with the sort of naïve cultural baggage that Westerners sometimes bring with them in their study of Eastern ways. But what we have here is a first-person essay, almost a travelogue. It was written after many months in India, visiting with swamis in rock caves, hermitages, universities and religious festivals. The book contains a generous portion of taped conversations with these swamis and although their grammar appears consistently poor, their words are rich with details of their fascinating life.

It is not a life of luxury but one of rigorous yogic exercises. It is not a life of merely chanting mantras but of devoutly studying the scriptures of Hinduism. It is not only a life of wearing the simplest garments but also renouncing all pleasures of worldly existence.

What for? What is the point of all these sacrifices, these painful self-deprivations? A swami, as Mr. Boyd points out, is supposed to be a "master of self," and to achieve such a state and then to sustain it, he must daily put himself through the grind.

The end result of their labors is not only in the spiritual peace, indeed even bliss, that swamis achieve, but also in awesome mental powers. For example, Swami Rama, a guru who came to the United States to be tested at the Menninger Foundation in Kansas, does things like manipulating his heartbeats to 300 a minute. Other swamis can suspend their breathing for what seems to be superhuman periods of time.

Mr. Boyd is clearly captivated by such feats. But he has a good reporter's instincts and he does not fail to ask the swamis just how these things are done. And in the course of his inquiries, he gives us finely crafted portraits of the gurus and of their disciples, including the spiritual "groupies" from both the East and the West who journey to the swamis' ashrams in wondrous curiosity.

One of the recurring observations of some swamis concerns their own reservations about colleagues who travel to foreign lands and engage in gimmickry and seek glamour. The business of being a swami must not mean becoming a businessman, according to the gurus, and while none of them launches a diatribe in Mr. Boyd's book, their views are obvious: The gurus who grab headlines are viewed dimly, because they do give swamis in general a bad name.

No More Retreats

Which brings us to two "lessons" of this book.

One is that there is no such thing as an isolated "retreat" anymore. "There is no real ashram where people can withdraw from the cares of the world. There is no real temple where people can live in some sort of holy isolation. The only real ashram where people can live and work is the world itself. The earth is our temple, the temple where through work, humility and devotion we acquire the knowledge to live not in withdrawal and isolation but in harmony with all of life."

And the other lesson, according to Mr. Boyd, is to "work on oneself."

"The saints and the swamis . . . are all working on themselves," he writes. "Whether a man meditates, produces fire from his mouth, or helps to clean the streets of Rishikesh [a holy city in India] he is working on himself. . . . Your work is to be selfless and to do selflessly because to work selflessly is to discover the Self."

In short then, no need to run away to the mountains. It's all here to be found, right in the middle of the fray, because the truth is always a presence in daily life—only we don't reach out enough for it.

So?

So all of us can become swamis, really—not the bearded, robed sort necessarily, but disciplined, loving men and women who find in our work and in one another all the fulfillment of life.

Liberal Party Split on Senate Race

By THOMAS P. RONAN

Representative Bella S. Abzug and former Mayor John V. Lindsay, both of whom had considerable support within the Liberal Party for its nomination for United States Senator from New York, said yesterday that they would not accept the nomination if it was offered.

While there was opposition within the party to naming Daniel P. Moynihan, the Democratic nominee, party leaders agreed that his prospects of getting their nomination were greatly enhanced by the withdrawal of Mrs. Abzug and Mr. Lindsay.

However, immediately after they stepped aside, an anti-Moynihan faction began a movement to draft Dr. Donald S. Harrington, the Liberal state chairman. A severe critic of Mr. Moynihan, Dr. Harrington was leader in the movement to persuade either Mrs. Abzug or Mr. Lindsay to run.

Dr. Harrington said yesterday that he was taking the draft movement "seriously" and that he planned to consult his wife and political associates. He said he would decide before party leaders meet Monday on the nomination.

'Flip-Flops' Alleged

"I can't tell," he replied when asked if his entry might help Senator James L. Buckley, the Conservative-Republican candidate. He said it was one of the factors he had to consider.

Other party leaders, who asked not to be named, said they were concerned about the movement to draft Mr. Harrington because they believed his candidacy would help Mr. Buckley, whom they consider an archconservative.

Alex Rose, vice chairman of the party and its chief political strategist, said the outcome of the meeting was uncertain and declined to name his own preference. He said there was a difference of opinion among the leaders and the rank and file on the course to take.

Dr. Harrington said he did not trust Mr. Moynihan. Accusing the Democrat of a number of "flip-flops," he recalled that the former United States representative to the United Nations had said it would be dishonorable for him to leave that post and run for any office.

Dr. Harrington and Edward A. Morrison, a former Liberal Party leader who is now chairman of the State Crime Compensation Board, said they believed that either Mrs. Abzug or Mr. Lindsay could win the Senate post as "a liberal running against two conservatives."

Mrs. Abzug told a newsman that she did not believe a race by her was "politically viable." She said it was "just too late" to start and cited the money and other problems involved as well as her commitment to campaign countrywide for Jimmy Carter.

highlighted a day of campaigning in three upstate cities. It was supposed to be four cities, but the Senator, caught like many commuters in a Long Island Expressway traffic jam, missed a plane and had to skip a planned first stop at Albany.

Mr. Moynihan, like the Supreme Court, was a target of some unaccustomed Buckley barbs that reflected the Senator's view that he faced a stiff fight for re-election.

The crew-cut Senator declared in an interview that Mr. Moynihan had "exploited every ounce of juice" from his former position as United States representative at the United Nations in the current campaign. "I'm concerned over the destruction of the credibility of that position," he said.

In Buffalo, he criticized his opponent, whom he repeatedly referred to as Professor Moynihan, for supporting the right of teachers to strike in that city. Senator Buckley said that the state's Taylor Law barring such strikes should be enforced.

Earlier, in Rochester, he had attacked Mr. Moynihan and the Democratic-controlled Congress for proposing "inflationary" social welfare programs that "crucified" the elderly and "scuttled their financial security." However, the Senator himself has been given only a 5-percent favorable rating by a major group of the elderly, the National Council of Senior Citizens.

In other areas, the Senator conceded that there was "a lack of enthusiasm for the Ford-Dole ticket among important portions of the Conservative Party." He said he hoped the group would work for the ticket because the President is "fundamentally a conservative."

He also said he represented a "clearly majority sentiment" within the Republican Party, and not the fringes of the party, as Mr. Moynihan charged last week. Mr. Buckley said he was "way up at the top of the list" of Senators who had supported Ford Administration programs.

Decisions Called 'Short-Sighted'

His strongest words of the 12-hour day were reserved for the parochial school issue. The speech wound up a day that included news conferences in Buffalo, Rochester and this city, and visits here to a Buckley headquarters, a LeMoyne College cafeteria and a fund-raising event.

Crowds were sparse on a cool, clear day that heralded the onset of fall upstate.

Senator Buckley started his fall campaigning by declaring that private schools were threatened by tight budgets and a lack of governmental aid. He placed at least someo f the responsibility for this situation on the Supreme Court.

"A series of the most short-sighted decisions, each one more contorted than its predecessors, has denied to American parents any hope of securing for their children in private schools their fair share of the tax revenues spent on education," he said.

The Senator noted that two centuries ago dissenters from the established churches of New England were permitted to support their own ministers, but only after they paid taxes to support the official religion. He said:

"So, too, Americans of today are permitted—through the narrow tolerance of the Court—to preserve their own minority culture and religion through private schools, but only after they have been heavily taxed to support state institutions, which all too often indoctrinate students in the dogmas of a new state creed: secular humanism."

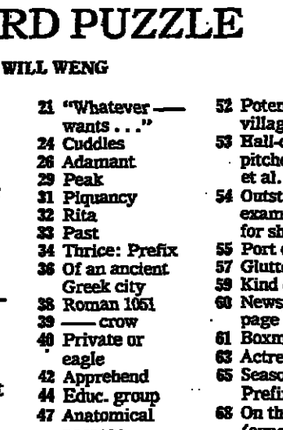
OVERWEIGHT?

If you are 20 or more pounds overweight—

If you've gone up and down like a yo-yo—

If you've tried diets, pills, injections and/or fasting and you're as fat or fatter than ever—

—here at last may be an answer to your quest.



Before I published this book I tested the program myself. In 120 days I dropped 83 pounds—going from 240 to 157. I've never felt better. I've become thin again after 20 years of unsuccessful "dieting" . . . and just about when I'd given up all hope of ever being thin again!

You can do it too.

He led a low heart toward the dummy, and West had to duck. Now he was able to proceed on reverse dummy lines. He ruffed a diamond, entered dummy with a club lead to the ace and ruffed the last diamond.

Now the last trumps were drawn. When these divided conveniently, de Nexon claimed four club tricks for a total of 12, conceding a heart trick at the finish. Oddly enough, six clubs would have had no chance and six hearts would have failed unless the declarer made an inspired play in the trump suit.

Electionomics

The first debate between Mr. Ford and Mr. Carter was focused almost entirely on economic issues, especially unemployment, inflation and taxes. The continual throwing about of statistics (as in "lies, damned lies, and statistics") must have left the vast majority of viewers baffled and bored. Only the most experienced and knowledgeable auditors could possibly have picked his or her way through the dense and often contradictory assertions made by each candidate.

If we thrust the statistics and hyperbolic claims aside, what were the two candidates really proposing to do about the nation's disordered economy?

On unemployment, Mr. Carter offered a wide variety of programs—such as channeling more Federal money to high unemployment areas, creating special job programs for the urban poor, providing more Government support for housing. He promised to get the overall jobless rate down to 4 or 4½ percent by the end of his first full year in office. He ducked the question whether he favored an "incomes policy" (wage and price controls) and said that, with so much unused capacity, the nation had a long way to go before it would run into inflationary pressures.

President Ford was not strongly challenged either on his own weak anti-inflation policy or his unsatisfactory record on prices or jobs. To deal with unemployment, he called for more tax cuts to stimulate the private economy, harking back to his proposal of a year ago for a $28 billion tax reduction. Asked how the budget, already deep in deficit, could stand such a huge tax cut now, Mr. Ford reminded listeners that he had demanded simultaneous dollar-for-dollar cuts in Federal spending. He implied that, to spur the economy, he would ask for cuts in both taxes and spending once again.

To sum up the basic thrust of the two candidates' economic policies: Mr. Ford would use further tax cuts as his major weapon to deal with the sluggish and inflation-ridden economy, and Mr. Carter would use targeted spending programs.

But each candidate, for political reasons, would buy some part of the other's policy: Mr. Ford would launch some minimal social spending programs; Mr. Carter promised not to raise taxes on the poor or the middle class, but only on the rich and on business.

Both candidates sought to sound like budget balancers. Mr. Ford said he could cut taxes, raise spending and still submit a balanced budget by January of 1978—through economic growth and growing tax revenues. Mr. Carter said he could increase spending, not raise taxes, and balance the budget by fiscal 1981—through economic growth and a $60 billion rise in the "fiscal dividend."

It is doubtless too much to expect Presidential candidates to perform like master economists; indeed, they may have asked too much of themselves—they were overbriefed, and showed it. What the voters really need is a clear overall statement of each candidate's social and economic policy and the main elements of what his economic program would be.

These programs should be founded on careful analytical work by the economists; but a Presidential candidate should not try to snow an audience with all the data underlying his policy, nor treat his opponent's as an exercise in sheer charlatanry. That not only destroys the credibility of both candidates but undermines respect for the democratic process.

Audio Gap

Bobby Burns' classic warning about "the best laid plans. . . ." came true with a vengeance when the sound failed at the first Carter-Ford debate. Even a nation that gets daily weather reports from Mars can't be sure that the most carefully prepared television broadcast in the history of political campaigning will come off without technological breakdown.

No doubt the C.I.A. and the F.B.I. and a half-dozen Congressional committees are already deep into investigations; but any engineer knows that the mishap was a predictable result of the most fundamental feature of nature which is summarized in Murphy's second law, the one that says that if anything can go wrong it will, and probably at the worst possible time.

Whatever the cause of the unscheduled interruption, it had a usefulness all its own. For over an hour each candidate had been devoting much of his talk to plans for the future, to the good things that would happen if only he were elected and allowed to implement his program as though each man really knew what the future could bring and really could control it.

The gadget that failed was a useful reminder that in small things as well as large, the future is unknown and the chance happening, the fortuitous event, the unexpected surprise is a constant feature of human life that will plague the next President, whoever he may be.

A Man of Integrity

Paul Howard Douglas of Illinois was the kind of Senator you like to think about in the Bicentennial year. He went to the Senate for one purpose and one purpose only: to work as hard as he possibly could for the good of the nation as he had come to understand it. He was nobody's notion of a lion on the cocktail circuit, but he was a tiger in subcommittee meetings on tax bills, housing policy, conservation issues or civil rights initiatives. His head was full of facts, economic theories and visions of a better, fairer and more decent America.

The facts of his life are fairly well known. He was born in 1892, educated at a number of places including Harvard and taught economics at Reed, Illinois, Chicago and Amherst. He enlisted in the Marines during World War II at the age of 50, was wounded, decorated and rose to the rank of lieutenant colonel. He was elected to the Senate in 1948 and served three terms before being defeated in 1966. The essential facts of his life were his overwhelming decency and integrity. He was an adornment to democracy.

The Antitrust Bill

President Ford has declared himself in favor of a strict enforcement of the antitrust laws. Yet the most important antitrust measure in decades, passed by Congress over a week ago, is still awaiting his signature.

The bill, which has been carefully tailored to meet the objections of many conservatives in Congress and of Mr. Ford's Justice Department, is still opposed by some business groups, especially the Business Roundtable and the Chamber of Commerce. But the President's Attorney General, Edward Levi, and Director James Lynn of the Office of Management and Budget support the bill. Treasury Secretary Simon wants Mr. Ford to veto it.

The bill would strengthen enforcement of the antitrust laws in three ways:

- By authorizing state attorneys general to bring suits seeking treble damages on behalf of consumers against alleged price fixers, in what would amount to class-action suits;
- By broadening the Justice Department's investigative authority in civil antitrust proceedings; and
- By requiring large companies to notify the Government of anticipated mergers, to enable the antitrust authorities to delay mergers that they consider to be anticompetitive.

Business opponents of the legislation have concentrated their fire on the provision that would permit state attorneys general to bring suits in behalf of consumers, asserting that this would lead to harassment of businesses by politically ambitious officials eager to make a name for themselves at the expense of business. Given the severe restrictions imposed by the bill on the ability of state attorneys general to permit private attorneys to bring antitrust suits on a contingency fee basis, the limited antitrust budgets of state attorneys general, the safeguards provided by the courts, and the normal competition among states to attract industry to their areas and keep it there, it is difficult to see why this legislation should or would lead to a rash of phony or flimsy cases against business.

President Ford has to sign or veto the bill by Sept. 30. Congress would still have one day before adjournment to try to pass it over his veto, if he chooses that course. Since former Governor Carter has declared his support for the antitrust bill, a veto by Mr. Ford—even if it were overridden—would add weight to the charge that he is more responsive to business pressures than he is concerned about protecting consumers.

Nuclear Second Thoughts

Two European developments of the past few days should give pause to the proponents of nuclear power as the best possible answer to the world's insatiable demands for energy. Sweden's Prime Minister Olof Palme blamed the defeat of his government on its program for greatly expanding that country's production of atomic energy, and in London a Royal Commission recommended that further expansion of England's nuclear plant capacity "be postponed as long as possible."

The commission's report—released after a study of two and a half years—is all the more significant for the fact that Britain was first to build an atomic reactor for the generation of electricity and that Sir Brian Flowers, the commission's chairman and a noted atomic physicist, was for years a leading advocate of that country's nuclear weapons and power programs. Obviously, neither he nor the commission can be charged with the kind of ill-informed prejudice and needless timidity that have been so fairly imputed to critics here who have been warning against the dangers of over-reliance on the split atom as a source of power.

Although the commission's report found a risk in the spread of conventional nuclear plants to technologically backward nations, its emphasis was on the dangers of the fast breeder, which produces more plutonium than it uses. An accident to this reactor could be expected to take a toll of from ten to a hundred times that from an accident to a conventional nuclear plant.

Beyond that peril, the report cited the hazards usually brought up by those who have been criticized as overly fearful: the risk of attacks on such installations in war or in totally unexpected raids by terrorists; the use of stolen plutonium for blackmail; the vastly increased police powers that would be needed to protect against such dangers and, not least, the diverting of funds to this enormously expensive source of energy at the cost of developing sources not only cheaper but safer.

Long overdue is a special commission in this country—one that, going beyond the scope of Sir Brian's group, would evaluate the entire question of energy sources. Even with conservation, which with convinced government leadership could go far to reduce the urgency of the problem, additional energy will no doubt impose strains on the environment and possibly on other aspects of society as well. It is time that a prestigious body of Americans—including economists, industrialists, environmentalists and philosophers as well as scientists—examined this crucial question without bias. Such a body might well point dispassionately to the best road to follow at the lowest social cost.

U.S. Economy: 'The System Works'

To the Editor:

Michael Harrington's article on capitalism's fate (Op-Ed Sept. 8) is a pitifully but thankfully inaccurate picture of our economic system. Pitiful because Mr. Harrington does not seem to recognize that, despite its faults, our economy is the most productive, efficient and rewarding system in the world. Individual initiative, coupled with a market allocation of resources, has produced the highest standard of living among large nations. And the rewards for the vast bulk of our populace are still impressive; else, would foreigners still clamor to work here?

However, we should all be thankful for Mr. Harrington's inaccuracy. Implicit in his argument is the belief that mediocrity is the level to which all should be pulled down, that we should curtail investment in productive plants which would employ more workers and that a totally state-run system is the preferred solution. Can you imagine an entire economic system with the bureaucracy, the waste, the inflated costs of the U.S. Postal Service? Can you imagine all of us taking our instructions from a civil service swollen with immense numbers of bureaucrats merely interested in protecting their job security, such as in socialist countries?

Our economy is far from perfect, of course. Greater progress must be made in increasing employment, even above the impressive current number of additions to the employed work force. Inflation must be better controlled, through investment in job-creating new plants and through a moderate fiscal and monetary government policy. But steady progress is already being made toward lowering both unemployment and inflation. The system works; it will provide many well-paying jobs, and it can eventually reduce inflation to an acceptable figure.

Rather than Mr. Harrington's false picture of impending doom, our future economic progress seems brighter and more assured than at any other time in the past five years. We can only marvel at and be thankful for the inherent resiliency and productivity of our economic system. It can and must be improved, but it's still the best in the world.

Carter Tax Plan

To the Editor:

I find it disappointing that [illegible] tried to buy our votes with our own tax money. Governor Carter's attempt to mitigate the outrageousness of his tax proposal by assuring us that he would increase the tax burden of only that portion of the electorate earning more than $30,000 per year.

The fact is that most of us who [illegible] into the income bracket that Governor Carter can so cheaply advocate "soaking" derive our incomes primarily from wages and salaries which we augment by working more hours and by making greater contributions to our employers and to society.

In fact, most of us are as much "working men and women" as the farmer or factory hand. Most of us were born to no privilege, come from not to lands which we can boast of having been in our families for two hundred years. I, for one, worked my way through college and feel no debt to anyone, least of all the Internal Revenue Service, for my success.

I find it impossible to express contempt for political candidates who question my right to retain the more than 50 percent of my income that accrues to my family after the deductions of the Federal, state and local governments. It has always been easy and popular for candidates to advocate confiscatory taxes for voters because they are exceptional. The popularity of such proposals in no way lessens their immorality and in no way ennobles the opportunism of politicians who espouse them.

West Side Promenade

To the Editor:

While many argue about the form which a replacement for the West Side Highway should take, I for one enjoy the existence of the original as a bicycle path and a pleasurable promenade above traffic, the waterfront architecture notwithstanding.

There is much potential benefit to be gained by refashioning the old highway into a promenade with a grass median bracketed by bicycle lanes. There is a paucity of greenery on the West Side, and such a promenade would be a welcome contrast to the otherwise concrete-and-asphalt environment. Moreover, such a project would effectively recycle the structure, a process already begun but whose transformation, in the manner described above, would make the West Side Highway a permanent esthetic asset for the city.

The major obstacle, other than the financing, lies in the dangers posed by the more dilapidated sections of roadway. I defer to the civil engineer for a professional assessment of the highway's condition, although I would assume that the lack of traffic and winter salting has slowed its deterioration. With respect to the financing, perhaps such a project would qualify for funds under the much-trumpeted Bicentennial Land Heritage Act. At the very least, the city would be saved the cost of demolition.

I look forward to the time when one of the oldest of modern highways is reborn as the most recent addition of parkland in the City of New York.

Of Abortion and Welfare

The Needless Jam

To the Editor:

The traffic jam pictured in The Times Sept. 18 was an instance of disgraceful negligence. The rain that caused flooding at 96th Street fell during Thursday afternoon and night. Twenty-four hours later, on Friday afternoon, cars were being allowed to drive down Henry Hudson Parkway in total ignorance of the hell that awaited them. Why were we not diverted at Dyckman Street or Riverside Drive? Overheated cars filled all the emergency parking lots. A prowl car and a tow truck were immobilized in the crush.

New York has many problems for which there is no immediate solution or no money. Surely letting cars by the thousands approach a flooded underpass is not among such dilemmas. A handful of policemen and a few barricades would have cost nothing but common sense.

'Present Corrections Policy Is a Myth'

To the Editor:

I read with joy your Sept. I editorial "Attica: Some Questions" and wish to compliment The Times for finally putting the responsibility on the professionals in criminal justice. It is high time that we look to the prison administrators, penologists and criminologists for the answers to what we as a society do with the criminal offender.

Prisons should not be used as warehouses—a means of temporarily protecting society by holding for a short time the criminal offenders. They should, in fact, be converted into recycling centers where people are "habilitated." Actually, 95 percent of our prison populations come from positions on the lowest rungs of the economic ladder. They have, therefore, been denied the essentials for living in the larger community free of the need (or desire) to commit criminal acts.

As Tom Wicker (column Sept. 3) says: "But the basic problem remains in these brooding warehouses of human lives; they are not a solution to the nation's horrifying crime rates but a substantial contributor to them."

Present corrections policy as I know it is a myth and will continue to be so long as we refuse to recognize that the cause of most of our crime stems from insulting, humiliating, social, racial and psychological oppression of our poor. There is no way to solve the problems of corrections unless we finally begin to provide quality education, decent housing and an end to racial discrimination in the ghetto areas of the greater community.

The first step in this direction would be to stop being intimidated by the shrill, vindictive cries of certain sections of our society. Our trained professionals provide us with the directions needed to put an end to our problems with prisons. For the same reason, let us also allow sociological professionals to provide us with answers to bring an end to our present system, which denies equal rights to a portion of our population and to put an end to the hypocrisy which we call "civilization."

For a 'No-Party' System

To the Editor:

We can spend ourselves blind trying to get the "good guys" elected to public office and keeping them there. On the other side of the fence the power of great wealth in the hands of giant corporations can outspend us many times over (with money they simply add to the cost of our products) to defeat the "good guys" and put their own "fair-haired boys" in office.

I feel the cards are stacked against us under this divided and manipulated political system of ours. Realization of this no doubt adds to the apathy of the voters in our country. There must be a better way. How about a no-party system, with our elected officials being elected from the grass-roots up, through levels, where each lower level selects the officials to serve at the next higher level, subject to the approval of the voters within the area? This would eliminate the major corrupting influences in politics, and wasteful and costly political campaigns, and would unite our people at least politically on the same side of the fence.

A New Way to Lose

To the Editor:

There's a new game in town, and New York is going to be the loser again.

For the last several weeks people have been setting themselves up on the sidewalks in and around Times Square and have been inviting passersby to guess which of the three cards turned face down is the red (the other two are black). You are invited to guess for ten or twenty dollars. This must be a pretty [illegible] business because each of these entrepreneurs has a fistful of money.

Somehow, with the crowds of people gathered around each game, our police never seem to notice or let it bother them that gambling is going on in the streets, in full view of anyone concerned and for reasonably high stakes.

Not all garbage in the Times Square area can be hauled away by the Sanitation Department; the police have to do their share.

MARVIN HARRIS

Honor at Hamilton

To the Editor:

One reason why Hamilton College's honor system, in effect since 1909, [illegible] works is that it is narrowly confined to academic issues. This is vastly different from the West Point problem, which seems to be one of all-inclusive rigidity. We have never been concerned whether a student lied or cheated about a previous shoeshine. Issues outside the academic realm can easily become lost in arguments of relevance and degree.

Our system has been kept up to date. It has been revised from time to time to keep up with changes in student mores as well as methods of teaching. The original constitution contained a good bit about exercises in rhetoric; nowadays the concern is about term papers.

Our system is operated by the students themselves. They do the policing; they are the judges. The members of the Honor Court are elected by the student body. It is a great honor to be so elected; the responsibilities are [illegible] found.

Faculty members are not allowed in the examination rooms as proctors but they may report plagiarism if it is discovered. Our experience has shown that cheating in examinations has been, at least in the 25 years I have been at the college, almost nonexistent. The faculty keeps out of the process until the very final stage—confirmation and review, and this is carried out by a delegated committee.

It has also been my experience that when cheating or plagiarism takes place, some way or another, the faculty member himself has contributed to the possibility of student transgression. We have discovered, for example, that so-called "take-home" exams are better dealt with as essays [illegible] questions of academic style and acknowledgment of sources is an important consideration.

'He Was Man-Multitude, Man-Ocean'

By Han Suyin

LAUSANNE, Switzerland—Mao Tse-tung is no more. Recognition of his giant stature and his history-shaking exploits have been ample and worldwide. Here I tell of my own search for Mao Tse-ting, his thinking that changed China and the world.

My involvement was not with Mao himself, but with the Chinese people. None of us who grew up in old China could escape the abject humiliation of the past nor the impact of the Revolution of 1949. I could not remain incurious about the Revolution and what it was doing to China. In a mixture of doubt and query, I went back to Peking in 1956, for "I would die in my soul if I did not return to see for myself," I said, adding to my Chinese friends: "I have come to see whether there will be a Stalin in China." The terrible shadow of the Russian purges haunted my youth, like that of so many liberal intellectuals.

This first visit left me in utter disequilibrium, perplexity, all views and values challenged and unsure. But I then learned how insensitive a liberal intellectual can be to the great impulses that course, like ocean tides among the once-deprived millions, now energized, feeling themselves masters of their earth.

Then came 1957, and the Hundred Flowers. Again I had the sensation of ground unsteady under me; of meaning and content gone out of once-familiar words. Long hours of talk and discussions with many people; long days of asking myself, "What is truth?" Then one night I opened a pamphlet, bought on the street, called "On the Correct Handling of Contradictions Among the People," by Mao. This was the first time I had read a word written by Mao, and I was 40 years old.

But it was a turning point in my life. Not sudden illumination, but the strong feeling that I had grasped something new, valuable, coherent, a way of thought, a vision, that fascinated me. The man's mind had cast the spell of clarity and coherence over mine, and I could not let go. During the following years came the inventory of my own heart and brain, as I examined the roots of my own assumptions and beliefs, and wondered at the power of Mao Tse-tung's ideas to transform the Chinese earth.

I was not alone in this fascination. There were others, many of them Americans, similarly obsessed. They hated and they loved Mao Tse-tung, because he forced them to rethink, but they, like me, could not let go of him.

For now, to abscond was shameful. As a writer, an artist, I must now embark on this journey of discovery or lose my soul into the evil of mediocrity. For now what passed for outstanding appeared to me mediocre when compared to what was happening in China.

The year was 1958, and the Great Leap Forward was upon the land; a maelstrom tearing all of us up by the roots. I went about China, and there was a shimmer, a glow about everything. Some still maintain that the Great Leap Forward was a disaster, but if China is today so strong it is because of this so-called disaster.

By then I had a host of friends in China, among them journalists who followed Mao Tse-tung as he bestrode the land indefatigably; they talked of the many hours with him in the fields, talking to people. Even in the bad year of 1960 when the stoppage of industry bedeviled the land, even then there was, beneath the surface, this great glow and warmth, which was the essence of Mao. A total absence of fear or of cringing. An element of love and trust when people spoke of him (in their intimacy, and not for show).

It was at the Great Leap Forward that the Chinese language began to change, infused with new words from Mao Tse-tung. Not only words, but sayings, pithy expressions, a word-of-mouth osmosis that was embedded in everyday conversation and that changed attitudes and behavior, for words are opinion formers. Throughout those years I heard them, and their startling imagery struck deep: "Teach the sun and moon to change places in a new heaven." "Order water to climb the mountain." A great, unrecorded web of awareness coursing among the people, and with it laughter. For Mao Tse-tung was a joyful man, inhabited by immense power and laughter.

And then suddenly silence. From 1961 to around 1964. "We can no longer hear the voice of the old one," cried a worker one day. "The old one" was Mao.

Those were the years when the Establishment, the mighty officials frightened of Mao because he threatened their secure positions, established a barrage between him and his people. The years of the snide attacks and the insulting articles and the open attempts to undo all that he had done.

Those were also the years when I often lost my temper in China, for I had become aware of this bureaucratic closing in.

Then, in September 1965, I was called to see Premier Chou En-lai. This was not the first but the seventh time that I had seen this wonderful man. He and his wife, Teng Ying-chao, had given me long, informal talks, of which I never wrote a word.

In that September, Premier Chou appeared aware of my mental confusion, and he talked, hinting at changes to come. Hinted only, but then so much of what is really important is delivered through hints. . . .

Then it was 1966 and the Cultural Revolution. I was back, looking at the walls of factories, covered with posters long before they flooded the streets. And then, one day, I was summoned to Wuhan, to meet Chairman Mao. Not alone, but in a group of 40 "writers," members of the Afro-Asian emergency meeting held in Peking that July. I was only an observer, since I represented nothing.

We gathered in a spacious room, ranked according to importance. My nonimportance got me the farthest corner, almost out of the photograph which was taken. Then suddenly Mao was there, bringing with him his great quietness. He shook hands with us, posed for a photograph, then left us without uttering a word.

There was hushed consternation, covered with smiles. Mao usually spoke a great deal to delegations. In a week I had worked it out, though I never mentioned this to anyone. The "writers" meeting was a show organized by the apparatus in Peking to prove . . . I know not what. Among the "writers" were foreign students from the University in Peking. And Mao Tse-tung knew that the show was a fake, so he did not inflict upon himself the simulacrum of a talk.

The next day we were taken on boats to the Yangtse, to see Mao plunge into the river for that symbolic swim. On the boat was Kuo Mo-jo, the eminent writer, who said to me benignly: "Chairman Mao is opening a new door for us." He left me on this cryptic remark. Mao flew to Peking that very afternoon, and the Cultural Revolution was on.

The Cultural Revolution was for me another turning point in my search. I knew then that Mao meant every word he said, that he would not betray the Chinese people, nor the Revolution. He would shatter his own Establishment, shake the edifice and bring it down upon the heads of the arrogant and the mighty rather than let it become the monument of a new tyranny.

I followed the twists and turns of the Cultural Revolution. Alternate agony and joy, rage and astonishment; lying awake nights thinking, hoping . . . traveling in China, picking one's way through the debris of once seemingly secure things, finding how archaic they had suddenly become; watching the new, the vital things surge up. Tales of horror and heroism, of love and beauty and self-sacrifice, of sordidness and degradation . . . a mighty turmoil, but to me mightily necessary.

And once again the talk of Mao, the words of Mao, going through the courtyards, the streets, the villages, in the evening cool, among the people.

And now I felt I could begin to write what I knew about Mao Tse-tung, with a clean heart. True, Mao Tse-tung was also Mao-legend, functioning within the images created of him. But now he would systematically proceed to destroy his own personality cult. He would efface his own physical self behind "The Thought of Mao Tse-tung."

This destruction of the personality cult also brought down Lin Piao, whom Mao had trusted and who betrayed this trust. Lin Piao's treachery was to Mao a grievous blow: "What hurt me most was the sinister arrow fired at my back by my ally, and his smiling face after I was wounded."

I recall those prodigious years when Mao Tse-tung ransacked himself in this immense, passionate, and cosmic undertaking, and achieved it. There is arrogance in any attempt to surmise a future without him since he already inhabits our future. In a way, he has always been there. His vision was always outreaching present and immediate space and time.

The people will miss him. They will miss his sayings and his jokes, that word-of-mouth osmosis that went through the streets and villages of China, and kept us kindled with joy in effort. Others cannot lead, as he did, with a poem and a movement of the heart. He was a man so modest, yet so supremely confident that no one could ambush him through vanity. He was a gentle and courteous man with a tremendous fund of wrathful invective for hypocrisy and humbug. He was man-multitude, man-ocean, and a very plain, simple man. I am glad that I lived in the time of Mao Tse-tung.

Han Suyin is author of "The Morning Deluge" and the forthcoming "Wind in the Tower." Both books deal with the life of Mao Tse-tung and the transformation of China between 1893 and 1976.

The First Debate

By William V. Shannon

WASHINGTON—The first debate amounted to a successful comeback for Jimmy Carter.

Until recent days, there had been every reason to suppose that Mr. Carter would do as well or better than President Ford in any debate. But after the Democratic nominee inflicted unexpected damage upon himself with incautious remarks in his Playboy interview, the first debate took on greatly enhanced significance. If Mr. Carter had put an erratic or mediocre performance in the debate back-to-back with the Playboy interview, his campaign would have shifted into reverse gear.

Instead, Mr. Carter put on a strong, upbeat performance. He showed himself at least as competent, well informed and articulate—and fully as "Presidential"—as Mr. Ford. The debate could reasonably be called a draw. If one insisted upon choosing a winner, Mr. Carter would have the edge. This was largely because he became more relaxed and more cogent as the debate progressed, while Mr. Ford grew steadily less effective.

In the opening exchange, Mr. Carter was visibly nervous and Mr. Ford looked as he wanted to appear, calm and authoritative. But in answering the second question addressed to him, on how he would finance his proposed programs, Mr. Carter began to hit his stride.

The next question, addressed to the President, contrasted the pardon for Mr. Nixon and the refusal to pardon those who would not fight in Vietnam. What followed were Mr. Ford's worst moments. He labored on for what seemed like a considerably longer time than it actually was, trying to justify the Nixon pardon, but he could offer only the lame explanation that "the need and necessity for me to concentrate on the problems of the country fully justified the action that I took."

Asked about his plans for reorganization of the Federal Government, Mr. Carter talked easily and convincingly about a subject that is obviously close to his heart. He stressed that the "substantial benefit" to be derived from Government reorganization was "the efficiency of it, the simplicity of it, the ability of people to understand their own Government and control it."

Mr. Carter might have done better, however, if he had explicitly rejected his questioner's premise that the purpose of reorganization is to reduce the number of Federal employees or to reduce the budget. By failing to do so, he left himself open to the President's rhetorically effective rebuttal in which he quoted statistics showing that Georgia's total expenditures, bonded indebtedness and number of employees had all risen during Mr. Carter's governorship notwithstanding the reorganization.

Mr. Carter stated his position on tax reform effectively. Discussing energy, he was at his most impressive. He sounded as if he knows a lot more about energy than Mr. Ford does and is much more interested.

President Ford encountered heavy weather as he tried to explain how he was going to pay for his suddenly developed programs in housing, education, unemployment and parks, and also give the large tax reductions he urged last night.

As the questioner pointed out, "For two years you've been telling us that we couldn't do very much in these areas because we couldn't afford it; and in fact we do have a $50 billion deficit now."

With regard to unemployment, Mr. Ford had equal difficulty trying to make his record look good. There was in the end no way he could escape the facts; two and a half million more people are out of work today than when he took office two years ago and unemployment in the last three months has been rising.

As the nearly two hours drew to a close, the camera showed Mr. Carter permitting himself an occasional smile, while Mr. Ford looked grim and weary, his lips had become a thin slash and his jaw muscles tense. The contrast was evident in their closing statements. Mr. Carter was gentle and inspirational. Mr. Ford attacked his opponent on the theme of trust, attacked his opponent's platform and then closed with a flat, banal plea to make America's third century "the century of individual freedom."

According to a Roper survey taken for the Public Broadcasting stations, a total of 61 percent of those polled thought that the debate was a draw or a Carter victory. In political terms, that was an excellent result for the nominee of the stronger party.

As long as Mr. Carter does as well as his opponent, the debates firm up his leading position and consolidate his inherent strengths derived from the economic issues and from the partisan loyalty of the more numerous Democrats. The debates are not then occasions for millions of people to change their minds. Rather they are, in the phrase of Carter pollster Pat Caddell, "vehicles of reassurance." They confirm voters in the opinions they had been tentatively forming.

Imbalance in the Recovery of the U.S. Economy

By Frank Riessman

The widely touted belief that our economy is recovering is in fact only a half-truth. For while the private sector is booming, as measured by any of a variety of indicators—profits, sales, gross national products, inventories, the stock market, housing starts—the public sector is in deep decline and shows few signs of recovery. Services are cut back, cost-of-living wage increases are postponed, and in some cases budget deficits threaten bankruptcy.

This imbalance between the private and public spheres is not at all typical in periods of overall economic upturn. Generally, the public sector expands when the economy improves, and in some cases public expenditures are an important propelling force. As we emerged from the Great Depression of the 1930's, public works and other public expenditures provided the expanded aggregate demand that was an important stimulus for the economy.

In the modern era, the expansion of the public sector has been an important factor both in the immediate sense of bringing the economy out of recession and in its long-term structural role of absorbing the expanding labor force. Despite its benefits for the economy, this expansion has always been resisted by major private sector forces for a variety of political (and economic) reasons, not least of which is the potential emergence of a new majority including minorities, the poor, women, etc.—groups that clearly benefit from both employment and services deriving from public-sector advance.

What are the causes of this highly unusual situation with its striking disharmony between private and public sector recovery?

At the most obvious level, of course, it is part of the Ford Administration's game plan, which is characterized by reduced social spending, not assisting the cities in their budgetary difficulties, maintaining the military sector, providing a variety of subsidies to the private sector through taxes and the like, accepting fairly high levels of unemployment in the midst of private-sector recovery, opposing the federalization of welfare and favoring the Southwest and the Western rim of the economy, which produce oil and military products and are the expanding segments of the economy.

There are other reasons too. The 1960's brought a significant expansion of services to those who had been historically underserved; perhaps the most vivid example is the expansion of higher education through open enrollment and the spread of community colleges.

Whatever may be said about some of the limits of these services, it should be noted that in most cases they did provide services and employment to poor and minority groups where none existed before.

Much, although not all, of the cost of these services is borne by the local community and the state.

The suburbanization trend is another contributing factor, because as people moved to the suburbs whole new service systems had to be established while the remaining city population's services could not be cut proportionately, if at all.

Local expenditures also increased heavily in the last decade as the public-employee unions caught up with their private-sector brothers and sisters. Thus, more people than ever before were employed at the city and state levels at higher wages, without a proportionate increase in tax receipts to pay for their services.

In order to counter the public-sector depression the various constituent forces affected—unions, professional groups, minorities, the aged, youth, women and the academic institutions—must join forces to overcome the basic ideology that prevents the mounting of appropriate action; that is, the powerful localist, anti-big-government mythology renewed in the 1960's and flourishing in the 1970's. The fact is that while the problems are experienced locally in the big cities, their cure lies nationally at the Federal level.

The misguided belief that efforts at the national level are doomed serves the forces that wish to maintain a long-term public-sector depression.

In earlier recessions Federal deficit spending in support of public services and public works was the choice over institutionalizing large unemployment. We must insist on that choice again, only now we must add national economic planning and controls. A New Deal-style expansion of the national debt without controls would be inflationary and ultimately serve to rationalize the weakening of the public sector.

Eyelet and Taffeta—A Feminine Revival

By BERNADINE MORRIS

Seventh Avenue is in the throes of a wild outbreak of femininity. Not many people seem to look with displeasure on the yards of ruffles, petticoats, cotton eyelet and silk taffeta that are sashaying down the runways, trailing echoes of another, more romantic, era.

The only dissidents are those who scream "functional" and, if pressed, insist that less is more. What they approve of is mannish tailoring, classic separates (shirts, blazers et al.) and clothes with a shape that is more rectangular than hourglass. Few are upset that jeans are moving off center stage.

The Enchanted

Those involved—being the people who buy and sell clothes and, to a lesser extent, the women who wear them and happen to be friendly enough with the designers to be invited to the openings—say they are enchanted that fashion is back.

The renaissance, given impetus and authority by the recent Saint Laurent collection in Paris, is reflected in all kinds of apparel, from the expensive evening dresses of Mollie Parnis to the sexy swimsuits of Cole in California.

The tailored or pared-down look is certainly not absent from the resort collections of clothes that will be in the stores in a month or two. But it is overshadowed by the explosive power of corseleted waistlines and billowing skirts. Any number of women who were not around to flounce in full skirts in the 1950's will have their first chance at traditional frills.

Bill Blass, in his collection for Blassport, put it all together with clothes that were as functional as Bermuda shorts with blazers and as frivolous as bouffant white cotton dresses with eyelet embroidery.

It was packaged under the general theme of "regatta," suggested by the blazers and boaters the men in the show wore.

"I've never been to the Henley regatta," Mr. Blass confessed. "But it seemed like a good point of departure—what the crews wore, what the onlookers wore."

Charm and Zest

So it was. The show indicated that Bermudas and big skirts could coexist, that corselet belts—if they weren't pulled in too tight—could look pretty on sundresses, and that cotton eyelet dresses, with their 19th century air, could lend charm and zest to present-day playtime.

Charlotte Ford, one of the women who used to concentrate on wearing clothes and now is producing them on Seventh Avenue, likes corselet belts, too. They generally embellish the plaid taffeta outfits with big matching stoles that are an important element in her second wholesale collection.

The first, which is coming into the stores now, emphasizes sweaters, skirts and jackets put together as a unit to make shopping easier.

The second, for Northern parties and Southern resorts this winter, adapts the same theory to evening clothes. The plaid taffeta dresses, for example, are actually shirts and skirts pulled together by that corselet belt. Alternatives are plaid blazers with solid color shirts and pants; Miss Ford has ordered one of these for her personal wardrobe, too.

Other ways she puts together separates include a taffeta tunic over solid-color pants, with a loose coat to throw over them, and a strapless long dress with slits at the sides pulled over matching crepe de chine pants.

"It can be worn without the pants, too," said Miss Ford, speaking of the strapless dress. "Kind of sexy that way."

Next month she starts a series of personal appearances to introduce her clothes with a visit to Saks Fifth Avenue.

"It will be exhausting, traveling around the country, but I'm looking forward to it," she said. She'll spend a week in Detroit, territory she knows well.

The Same Message

The Ford clothes sell for $120 to $280. Prices for the Mollie Parnis collection start at about the point where they leave off. Soft colors such as yellow and mauve in Ultrasuède and lots of soft silks—crepe de chine and chiffon—carry the same message at Parnis.

Most of the dresses flow gently over the body, but an occasional corselet belt or bouffant taffeta skirt makes the point of femininity with a flourish.

Kasper's sportswear collection for J.L. Sport alternates between loose tops over big skirts and puffy-sleeved blouses with cinched waistlines and big skirts. Obviously feminine, both of them. But then he even gives Bermuda shorts a soft touch by showing them in pastel colors with a couple of pastel sweaters.

Betty Hanson's designer, Jerry Feder, proves how feminine sportswear can be by showing such functional designs as culottes in cotton eyelet. And pants in dotted Swiss hardly look masculine. Both the designer and the manufacturer used to work for Anne Klein, who helped inaugurate the present sportswear cycle and they are expanding the horizons.

Fragile Touch Is Added

Lilac is a favorite color at this house, adding a fragile touch to navy outfits and acquiring punch in combination with green or orange.

It's only recently that one-piece bathing suits have been giving bikinis a run for their money. There isn't too much you can do to a bikini, but Bob Mackie, in his collection called "Beach and Beyond" for Cole of California, has done a good deal with the design of one-piece suits. Adding rhinestones to them is one approach, wide cut-outs is another.

It's likely that the one-shoulder look will be as prominent around pools and beaches next year as it has been in ballrooms today when every other chiffon dress seems to be made with one bare shoulder.

"Beyond" in the collection refers to the coverups, which Mr. Mackie believes are given even more wear than the swimsuits. Caribbean ruffles on a side-tied skirt, matched by a ruffled bra, carry the feminine approach to its natural conclusion.

Admission Ticket: Wear Their Styles

By DEE WEDEMEYER

No one wore a Saint Laurent but it could be argued that the party at Greek Island was in the height of fashion. Many of the guests wore peasant inspired clothing and had been wearing it for years.

To help celebrate the store's 13th anniversary and recent renovation, guests were invited to a "come-as-you-are-as long-as-you're-wearing-our clothes" party.

"The older, the better," the invitation said.

Greek Island specializes in adapting Greek styles—including shepherd's capes, shepherd's tunics, the shirt of the palace guard uniform, a blouse from an Athens grammar school uniform, garments in vogue on ancient Greek statues as well as stevedore shirts, boatneck sailor shirts and such non-native items as pants suits and caftans made from Greek fabrics including such unusual sources as bedspreads.

When the store opened in 1963, George Soter, vice president of an advertising agency and owner of the store with his wife, Effie, said "Everybody said it's great—the peasant look." But he said people expressed doubt that a store could sustain a business based on an ethnic style, and he was asked, "But then what will happen when that is over?"

"Two years later the peasant look was in and this year the peasant look—every year it's the peasant look," he said happily.

The party was held in the East 49th Street store and in Amster Yard, a courtyard behind the store owned by James Amster, a decorator. Electric guitar and bouzouki music was played. George Soter led guests in Greek dances. A photographer took a picture of each guest. Greek wine and a buffet of Greek food cooked by Mrs. Soter were served.

Fashionable Talk

Much of the conversation revolved around the fashions.

"It's a tablecloth," said Edgar Kaplan, who owns a men's clothing store in Upper Montclair, N.J., describing his wife's green velvet skirt.

"I still think it's a bedspread," said Carolyn Kaplan.

"I'm the husband of the oldest dress," said James Desmond, a cameraman from Mamaroneck, N.Y., whose wife, Kathie, wore a black minidress, circa 1963.

"You can wear it with pants now," suggested Mrs. Soter.

Mrs. Desmond's twin sister, Julie Houston, an editor at Simon & Schuster, came in a bare midriff ensenble (about 1966, guessed Mrs. Soter); another sister, Susanna D'Alton, wore a yellow and white caftan that she said was "a big hit on the beach on Fire Island in 1965" and a fourth sister, Martina D'Alton, an assistant editor at Viking Press who once worked in the store wore a patchwork skirt with crocheted sweater circa 1969.

Greek Island has several designs of two costume designers from the theater and movies, Theoni V. Aldredge ("Chorus Line"), ("The Great Gatsby") and Anthea John Sylbert ("Chinatown").

Bedspreads may end up as a cape; tablecloths as skirts or a bit of embroidery or a doily btugh by the Soters may be incorporated into a dress. Mrs. Aldredge wore pants and an overblouse of offwhite homespun cotton with linen and silk embroidery, part of a table runner, inset in the shoulders. "You can eat off my shoulders," joked the designer.

Many of the designs are one of a kind.

Effie Soter wore a black skirt, embroidered in gold, made from one leg of a pantaloon, making the skirt one of two of a kind.

"If I'd known I'd have worn mine," said Ele Steinfield, research director of an advertising agency and owner of the other half of the pantaloon.

Just the Jewelers

Gloria Buce Davis, a textile designer, wore a shawl, that earlier in the day actually had been a table cover. Thomas Geismar, a graphics designer, wore a blue striped tie from the store, and his wife, Joan, wore a draw-string style dress that she described as a "new old dress." She bought the same style five years ago when she worked in the store, decided it was too short and recently ordered a longer one.

A few guests wore only jewelry from the shop, including Irma Shorell, who wore green worry beads, that, she said, had her worried because the tassels were tangling. Mrs. Soter told her to dip them in water to untangle them. "Not to worry," said Mrs. Shorell, a manufacturer of skin care products.

The most recent purchases were made in the store that night as about $400 in merchandise was sold while the party took place.

"I'm the neighbor; I live down the block," said Jay Herman, a commodity trader, as he paid $35 for a new shirt. "I'm the owner of nine Greek shirts and three of my ex-girlfriends are clothed in Greek shirts."

And then he had the Greek shirt in which he arrived placed in a bag and left wearing shirt No. 10.

Behind School Success Is a Father Who Cares

By JUDITH WEINRAUB
Special to The New York Times

LONDON, Sept. 24 — Does it really make any difference if a father turns up at a P.T.A. meeting? If a father takes his children to the zoo or to the movies or just out for a walk, will the child learn how to read any faster?

The answer, according to a continuing survey by the National Children's Bureau here, appears to be yes.

The survey, the National Child Development Study, has been monitoring the 16,000 children in Britain born during one week of March 1958 from their birth through early life and schooling.

Recently, in a study assessing the role played by fathers, the survey concluded that children whose fathers came to school conferences and accompanied their children on outings did measurably better in school.

The study does not pretend that if a father spends an afternoon with his child, the child will automatically spell or add any better. But it does assert that when the fathers accompanied the mothers to school meetings with the teacher, the children scored as much as seven months higher in reading and mathematics than children whose mothers went alone.

"It's not just the actual number of times the father goes to school with the mother or takes his child out," said Lydia Lambert, the research officer who compiled the report for the Children's Bureau.

'Symptomatic of Attitude'

"But these are considered to be the most important things affecting a child's score," she said. "They are symptomatic of an overall attitude of caring."

The purpose of the study was to try to determine the part played by fathers in a child's upbringing. It said it found a surprisingly high level of parental involvement.

Only 10 percent of the fathers were said to leave all childcare to the mother, while as much as 66 percent of the fathers were described by the mothers as playing an equal or large part in parental responsibility.

It also found that the child who could expect the most attention from the father was the only child. Similarly, the father's interest in his child dies as family size and financial difficulties increase.

"But no matter what kind of financial situation or family size child comes from, the father's participation made a definite difference to the child's progress," Miss Lambert. "It seems to ind a more secure environment."

In cases where mothers went out to work, the study did not find any involvement by the fathers those families of the same socio-economic group where the mothers at home.

"There were no signs that the fa were compensating for their wife's sence," said Miss Lambert.

The survey also found that a frequent overnight absences from was related to lower grades in and math for the child. But fathers worked on late shifts seemed to no discernable effect on the academic progress.

Most Observations Subjective

The study was based on inter with parents, doctors and when the children were 7 and 11 old. Most of the observations the fathers came from their mittedly subjective evaluation of role.

"The study isn't supposed to act," said Miss Lambert. shows is that to a certain the mother is satisfied that is doing his share, then the more likely to be doing well at

"And it makes clear that what social class a child comes the father's involvement is portant."

Last year, more than half of the 657 persons who died in car accidents in New York City were pedestrians. Seat belts, air bags and collapsible steering columns would not have helped them. It is, however, Sergeant Ghiorsi's task to determine what might have saved them from becoming victims of the modern age and its symbol: the automobile.

"Why? Why? That's constantly on my mind," he says, describing the work that he has done for close to 20 years. "We want to know who did it. It's like any other dead body that might be found."

There is a difference, of course, but it is one that makes no difference to him. The cases that he investigates are so-called accidents, but accidents can sometimes serve as masks for crimes or stem from negligence so blatant as to be criminal.

Carlessness Is Big Killer

Frank Ghiorsi, then, is something of a cross between a street-wise detective who wears a pistol on his hip and a physicist whose strongest weapons are formulas derived from laws of motion. Instead of fingerprints, he relies on skidmarks. The instrument of death that he recovers is the car.

Sergeant Ghiorsi's records for fatal pedestrian accidents in 1975 indicate that one driver was charged with murder, four were charged with manslaughter and 15 with criminally negligent homicide. There was also an assortment of lesser charges. In many cases, however, it is the pedestrian himself who is responsible, having allowed the rapid pace of city life to press him into carelessness.

Still, Sergeant Ghiorsi studies the filaments of headlights, for example, to determine if they were really on at the time—if at night—that an accident occurred. He gets photographs of the scene and reconstructs what happened. He then builds cardboard models—he is something of an artist—and studies just how the car could have wreaked the damage that it did.

Unit Commander Since 1972

He also considers the possibility that a seemingly careless move by a driver or pedestrian could have been caused by sudden illness and maintains close contact with the Medical Examiner's office, which performs autopsies on all victims of fatal accidents.

"Frankly, I believe in physical evidence, and I don't believe in what people tell me," Sergeant Ghiorsi said. "A lot of them really don't know what happened. But if I based my findings on what people tell me, I'd have to say that the most dangerous speed in

For every five men who were victims of fatal pedestrian accidents, there were three female victims.

Mechanical problems with the car were ruled out as a contributory factor in 239 of the 282 accident cases. Only five drivers in fatal pedestrian accidents were charged with driving while intoxicated, although intoxication may have been involved in some of the 15 cases of criminally negligent homicide.

The weather was clear at the time of 192 of the accidents, and no accidents occurred in sleet or fog. Most of the 282 fatal pedestrian accidents took place on Fridays and Saturdays, with the highest incidence between noon and 2 P.M., and between 4 P.M. and 6 P.M. There were 163 accidents in daylight, 105 in darkness, 10 at dusk and four at dawn.

Private Mail Delivery V. the Letter of the Law

By FRED FERRETTI

"The United States Postal Service is rotten, do you know that?" Patricia Brennan said yesterday. "I think next year they're going to charge 17 cents to mail a letter. Do you think service will get any better? Of course not. But when it goes to 25 cents I hope they have the decency to issue a Jesse James commemorative."

Mrs. Brennan has been angry with the Postal Service ever since it took a letter from a friend in Pocatello, Idaho, 13 days to reach her in Rochester, and so last March she and her husband, J. Paul Brennan, started their own letter-delivery service in the upstate New York city.

They call it Brennan Hand Delivery and they pick up letters from lawyers and small businessmen in Rochester's business district, the Inner Loop, and deliver them the same day.

'Never Lost a Customer'

They charge 10 cents a letter and have built up their business to between 500 and 600 letters a day. "We've never lost a customer and never had a complaint, and that's something the Postal Service can't say," Mrs. Brennan said in an interview from her home in Rochester.

The Postal Service, which charges 13 cents to do what the Brennans do for 10 cents, and has been criticized for a wide variety of alleged depredations committed against the mail of American citizens, is understandably annoyed at the Brennans.

George A. Freeman, inspector of the Pittsburgh division, which includes Rochester, said that in his view the private-express statute of the postal laws forbids private individuals from delivering first-class mail. "If all the elements are there, it could be prosecuted in Federal Court," he said.

Mrs. Brennan is not worried.

She said the Rochester legal community, much of which she and her husband serve, have offered time, knowledge and money to fight her case in court. And Brennan clients include the Monroe County Bar Association and the Appellate Division of State Supreme Court.

"Under the law I can have an abortion or open a massage parlor," Mrs. Brennan said, "but I cannot deliver letters. The Government has a monopoly on first-class mail and a law that protects that monopoly. Someone is going to beat that statute. I may wind up in the can, but maybe I'm young enough and stupid enough to win."

Mrs. Brennan is 23 years old and a graduate of St. John Fisher College in Rochester with majors in biology and chemistry, and her husband, 37, is a graduate of the same school who majored in history and English.

They picked up some support from Senator James L. Buckley yesterday when he passed through Rochester. He said he saw no reason why the Brennans "should be deprived of a livelihood, just because the Federal Government wants to preserve its monopoly."

The business is "still building," Mrs. Brennan said. The couple have no vehicles and no overhead, and use public transportation to take themselves back and forth across the Genessee River in the center of Rochester.

"You know," she said, "the Postal Service should hire me. I'd show them how to deliver letters. The Pony Express was faster than they are."

The 27-minute silence during the debate was caused by the failure of an obscure, 25-cent piece of equipment. While the television audience of about 65 million viewers waited and dwindled as the candidates stood at their lecterns, ABC engineers searched frantically for the cause of the trouble which took them 12 hours to finally track down. Particia Hearst was sentenced to seven years in prison on charges of armed robbery and using a firearm to commit a felony. Miss Hearst faced a maximum of 35 years in prison, but the sentence handed down by Federal Judge William H. Orrick Jr. was regarded by observers to be a good deal more severe than expected. [1:2-4.]

Jimmy Carter expressed regret about remarks he made about former President Johnson in a magazine interview. Arriving for a campaign trip to Houston, Mr. Carter said the remarks, in which he said Mr. Johnson had engaged in "lying, cheating and distorting the truth," had come in a post-interview statement. United States Supreme Court decisions prohibiting most parochial school aid were termed "religious repression" by Senator James L. Buckley. The remarks were seen as a major appeal to Catholic voters, who could form a crucial swing vote in the Senate election. Mr. Buckley said the court was unconcerned with individual rights and the protection of conscience in the area of religious education. [1:2.]

Off-duty police officers picketed at almost all of New York City's station houses to protest new work schedules and deferred pay raises. While their members marched, representatives of the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association tried unsuccessfully to persuade Mayor Beame to agree to their demands. The Mayor said he would not agree to a 6 percent deferred salary increase until the union had dropped a suit to get the raise retroactively. [1:4.]

H. Rap Brown was granted parole from Greenhaven Prison after serving almost 3½ years of a 5-to-15-year sentence in a robbery and assault conviction. Shortly after the parole was announced, Mr. Brown's 1968 conviction in New Orleans on Federal gun charges was reversed. Without that decision, the former spokesman for black militancy would have had to go immediately from New York to a Federal prison. [32:4-6.]

Business/Finance

A dispute over penalties for the defaulters in last spring's Maine potato trading scandal emerged at the New York Mercantile Exchange. One of the exchange's governors left a meeting where negotiations were going on about fines and other penalties that could be levied against traders who sold contracts for potatoes and then failed to deliver them. The exchange has no power to impose fines, which must be worked out through brokerage firms. [25:5-6.]

The collapse last week of the American Bank and Trust Company was apparently the result of corruption and bad management—all set in an atmosphere of international intrigue. What actually happened is still obscure, but certain facts seem clear. An Argentine investor, whose father wanted to buy the bank, assumed control of the institution and, within a year, had allegedly carried out dozens of illegal transactions and had siphoned off millions of dollars into family businesses. [25:1-2.]

Citibank lowered its prime interest rate to 6¾ percent from 7 percent in the face of continued sluggish loan demand. In Washington, meanwhile, the Federal Reserve's Open Market Committee disclosed that it kept monetary policy unchanged at its Aug. 27 meeting. It did, however, narrow the target range for the rate on the money that banks lend to each other. [25:1-2.]

Stock prices fell slightly in much slower trading. The Dow Jones industrial average ended the session off 1.49, to close at 1,009.31. [25:4.] Cocoa futures closed higher in New York, while corn and soybeans closed lower in Chicago. [27:4.]

Quotation of the Day

"We live in a world of rapid change and if we are to survive in such a world we must be prepared to adjust ourselves to change."—Prime Minister Ian D. Smith of Rhodesia in announcing that his nation would move toward majority rule. [4:6.]

CORRECTION

A sentence in Vincent Canby's review in The Times yesterday of "The Spirit of the Beehive" contained a typographical error. The sentence should have read: "Everything is a bit chilly at first, but as the film goes on we realize it's not because the film lacks feeling but because it has so much."

Former Sen. Paul H. Douglas Dies; Liberal Illinois Democrat Was 84

By CHARLES KAISER

Former Democratic Senator Paul H. Douglas, a champion of liberal causes who represented Illinois for 18 years, died yesterday at his home in Washington. He was 84 years old.

His life was a series of paradoxes. A political reformer, he was sent to the Senate in 1948 with the help of the Chicago Democratic machine. A Quaker by conviction, he became a decorated Marine in World War II. A country boy from a backwoods farm, he became a famous economist.

He combined the moral rectitude of New England, where he was born, with the crusading liberalism of the Middle West, where he spent most of his adult years. When his service in the Senate ended in 1966 with his defeat by Charles H. Percy, he returned to his first career as an academic, joining the faculty at the New School for Social Research.

Wrote Economics Book

In 1920 Mr. Douglas joined the faculty at the University of Chicago to teach economics, and he gained a national reputation in the field with the publication in 1930 of "Real Wages in the United States," followed four years later by "The Theory of Wages."

His greatest contribution is considered to be the early work he did on the production function—the mathematical analysis that relates labor to capital—which ushered in the modern era of analysis of production by economists.

Almost all his life, he was drawn to unpopular causes. As a member of the National Recovery Administration's council on consumer finance in 1934, he raised the question of truth-in-lending, and the N.R.A. suggested that he resign.

He was a leader of the protest against the Memorial Day Massacre at the Republic Steel plant in Chicago. The police killed 10 people that day, and he said it did not seem proper; some of Chicago's civic leaders suggested that he be dismissed from his job as a professor.

Won Chicago Race in 1939

Mr. Douglas first ran for elective office in 1939, and in the face of a split in the Democratic machine won a seat as a Chicago alderman.

Three years later he ran unsuccessfully for the Senate, and the day after his defeat enlisted as a private in the marines. Because of pacifist leanings he delayed volunteering in World War I; when he finally did so toward the end of the war, he was turned down for bad eyesight.

In 1942, with the help of his old friend, Secretary of the Navy, Frank Knox, he was given a combat assignment. He won the Bronze Star for service at Peleliu, where he was injured. He was injured again at Okinawa, and was discharged in November 1946 as a lieutenant colonel after 14 months in hospitals.

When the Democratic machine reluctantly gave him its blessing to challenge the incumbent Republican Senator, C. Wayland Brooks, in the 1948 election, Mr. Douglas was still essentially an academician, a man who walked with an air of brooding abstraction.

But he had the wit and a sense of drama that endeared him to voters. When Senator Brooks refused to debate, Mr. Douglas addressed an empty chair, crossing the platform from time to time to speak "in behalf of" his absent opponent. The device delighted his audience and he repeated it across the state.

He won the election by more than 400,000 votes and entered the Senate with two other freshmen, Lyndon B. Johnson from Texas and Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota.

Born in Massachusetts

Paul Howard Douglas was born March 26, 1892, in Salem, Mass. the son of James Howard Douglas, a traveling salesman. His mother, Annie Smith, died when he was 4, and he was brought up by an uncle on a farm near Moosehead Lake in Maine.

He graduated in 1913 from Bowdoin College, where he was Phi Beta Kappa and won a football letter. He took his masters degree in 1915 at Columbia University. Columbia awarded him his Ph.D. in 1921, a year after he had started teaching at the University of Chicago.

When he reached the Senate he hung the portraits of two Renaissance scholars on the wall of his office—an oil of Erasmus, and a pencil sketch of Sir Thomas More.

"These two fellows are important to me," Senator Douglas once told a visitor. "They are a good brake, or a sort of warning signal, at least."

"You see," he continued, "both of them were professors of sorts. One went into politics and lost his head. The other stayed out and kept his. I find it very useful to ponder which was the smarter of the two."

Remembered by a Colleague

The scholarly man was hailed as a visionary yesterday by many of his colleagues. Representative Abner J. Mikva, an Illinois Congressman and a protege of Senator Douglas, noted that "almost every one of the items we're discussing this week in Congress were issues he was discussing in the '40's and '50's—financial disclosure by senators and representatives, public financing of campaigns, sunshine laws—these were all his ideas," Mr. Mikva said.

Senator Douglas operated effectively within the Senate though he never became one of the "inner circle." Among the habits that annoyed some of his colleagues were his insistence on annually publishing his income and net worth and his rule that neither he nor his staff would accept a gift worth more than $2.50.

"He was a liberal who was also simultaneously concerned about what things cost—that was a very rare combination," said Newton N. Minow, a Chicago lawyer who was active in Senator Douglas's early campaigns, and who later became chairman of the Federal Communications Commission in the Kennedy Administration.

While Senator Douglas opposed Government waste and mismanagement, "he also always wanted the Government to do things that were going to help the disadvantaged," Mr. Minow said.

Alliance With Daley

His accommodation with the political machine of Mayor Richard J. Daley was also somewhat unusual; "Daley would never tell him how to vote on an issue, and Douglas would never tell him how to run the organization," Mr. Minow recalled.

Perhaps Senator Douglas's most important contribution was in the area of civil rights. Long before it was a popular position, he fought for those rights, and the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965 incorporated many of his proposals.

He also fought against tax loopholes, as early as 1951. In that year he and Senator Humphrey held the floor, for several days, trying to close loopholes in the Revenue Act of 1951, a tax measure. They achieved minimal success.

Senator Humphrey once said that no man had his name on "more major issues, major bills, and major legislation, than Paul Douglas."

Some of his liberal friends were dismayed by the Senator's strong support of the Vietnam war, which continued into the early 1970's. But like his other beliefs in civil rights and civil liberties, his convictions about the so-called domino theory would not be compromised.

"If we get out of Vietnam," he once asked, "how will we defend Thailand and stop the Communists from taking the Malay Peninsula? And if they take that, what protects India?"

A year after he left the Senate, Mr. Douglas was appointed by President Johnson to head the National Commission on Urban Problems. On Dec. 14, 1968, the commission recommended a system of Federal revenue sharing with the states and the cities, to encourage the consolidation of local governments within a metropolitan area.

Mr. Douglas and his staff found that a third of the country's population was still ill-housed, and the reports' findings did not please Mr. Johnson.

The former Senator's memoirs, "In the Fullness of Time," were published in 1972.

The Senator's first marriage to Dorothy S. Wolff ended in divorce in 1930. He is survived by his widow, the former Emily Taft, and five children: Paul Douglas Jr. of New York City, John Douglas, a Washington lawyer, Mrs. Jean Bandler of New York City, Dorothea John, also of New York, and Helen Klein, of Rockville, Md.

A private funeral service will be held in Washington.

Erica Anderson, 62, a Film Mak[er] And Schweitzer Associate, Is [Dead]

By THOMAS W. ENNIS

Erica Anderson, a documentary film maker and an associate of the late Dr. Albert Schweitzer, died Thursday of a heart attack at her home in Great Barrington, Mass. She was 62 years old.

In 1966, Mrs. Anderson established the Albert Schweitzer Friendship House in a renovated barn on property she had purchased in Great Barrington and made available to researchers her large collection of papers and memorabilia of the missionary and winner of the Nobel Peace Price, who died in 1965.

Mrs. Anderson made numerous documentary films. One of these was of Schweitzer at work at his world-famous hospital in Lambaréné, Gabon, made in collaboration with Jerome Hill. It took five years to film. The documentary had its premiere at the Guild Theater in New York early in 1957. Its English narration by Burgess Meredith and the late Fredric March was translated into many other languages.

Mrs. Anderson's other documentaries included "Grandma Moses" (1950) and "Henry Moore, Sculptor" (1947).

A Student of Photography

GERALDINE T. FITCH DIES; WROTE BOOK ON TAIWAN

Geraldine Townsend Fitch, who wrote about and did public relations work for Nationalist China, died Thursday in Pomona, Calif. She was 84 years old and lived there at the Mount San Antonio Gardens Retirement Home.

Mrs. Fitch, the wife of George Fitch, a retired secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association, studied at Albion (Mich.) College and Chung-Ann University in Korea.

For several years in the early 1960's she was a consultant editor to The Free China Review and other English-language publications in Taipei, Taiwan. She was also the author of a book, "Formosa Beachhead," published in 1953—a report on the island and the Chinese Nationalist Government.

REPORTED WIRETAP IS CALLED FICTITIOUS

DiFalco's Attorney Says Keenan Told Him No Electronic Device Had Been in Client's Office

By TOM GOLDSTEIN

The lawyer for S. Samuel DiFalco, the Manhattan Surrogate, said in court yesterday that he had been told by John F. Keenan, the special state prosecutor, that no wiretap had ever been placed in the Surrogate's office.

Newspaper reports that a wiretap had been placed in Mr. DiFalco's office were published late last year at the time that Maurice H. Nadjari was battling to stay on as special prosecutor investigating corruption in the city's criminal-justice system.

Mr. Nadjari said then that a few days before Governor Carey tried to dismiss him, his office had begun an inquiry into how information of a secret court-authorized wiretap had been disclosed to targets of a Nadjari investigation into corruption in the court system.

Last May, Mr. DiFalco and Justice Irving H. Saypol of State Supreme Court were indicted by a Nadjari grand jury on charges that they had illegally steered $20,000 in commissions to the justice's son in exchange for the justice's appointing a lawyer to a court assignment. Mr. DiFalco is now attempting to have that indictment dismissed by the Appellate Division that sits in Manhattan.

Mr. Keenan said yesterday he would not comment on the statement made by Joseph J. Marcheso, the lawyer for Mr. DiFalco, because court papers in the case have been ordered sealed by the Appellate Division.

But sources familiar with the case corroborated Mr. Marcheso's statement. They said that the wiretap that Mr. Nadjari said had been "compromised" was one that had been placed in the office of Thomas Fitzgerald, who retired earlier this year as Manhattan's public administrator.

Mr. Fitzgerald, who worked in the Manhattan Surrogate's building, was indicted last May by a Nadjari grand jury on perjury charges along with Carmine G. DeSapio, the former Tammany Hall leader.

According to those indictments, in mid-December, 1975, Mr. DeSapio told Mr. Fitzgerald that Mr. Nadjari had "tapes" of Mr. Fitzgerald's conversations.

Mr. Fitzgerald, Mr. DeSapio, Mr. DiFalco and Justice Saypol have all pleaded not guilty to the charges. Lawyers for the four men appeared in court yesterday before Supreme Court Justice Leonard H. Sandler, asking that copies of wiretap orders be turned over to them immediately to help them prepare their defense.

Mr. Keenan's office and the office of District Attorney Robert M. Morgenthau of Manhattan, where the Saypol case has been transferred, were given until Oct. 15 by Justice Sandler to comply with a law that requires such wiretap information be turned over.

E.P.A. Delays Reducing 'Gas' Lead

WASHINGTON, Sep.t 24 (AP)—The Environmental Protection Agency today dropped its controversial plan to reduce the amount of lead in gasoline on a step-by-step basis over the next three years.

Instead, the agency said that it would allow refiners to keep lead content at current levels for the three-year period and to make the total reduction in one step after the grace period expires.

The announcement came exactly one week before the plan was to go into effect. The agency said that it was taking the action because studies by the Government and by independent contractors showed that reducing lead content in phases would result in gasoline shortages during the summer months in 1977 and 1978.

Lead is used to increase gasoline octane. Attaining the same octane rating without lead requires more crude oil.

Leaded gas, used in all cars not equipped with the pollution-reducing catalytic converters, has long been considered a potential health hazard. The agency ruled earlier that phasing out the lead content was necessary to prevent a significant risk to human health.

Russell E. Train, administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, said the new regulations "will meet the same ultimate goal as the original standards but will not do so at the expense of another gas shortage."

The agency originally planned to require refiners to use no more than 1.4 grams of lead per gallon of gas after Oct. 1. This amount would have been decreased to 1 gram per gallon in 1977, to 0.8 grams per gallon in 1978 and to 0.5 grams per gallon on Jan. 1, 1979. The agency estimates that the lead content in gasoline now ranges from 1.6 grams per gallon to 1.9 grams per gallon.

The new timetable eliminates the Oct. 1 and the 1977 reductions and says that the agency will waive the 1978 standard as well so long as refiners can show they are in the process of procuring and installing the equipment necessary to reach the final goal of 0.5 grams per gallon. This final goal would become effective on Oct. 1, 1979 instead of on Jan. 1 of that year.

Ernest Simon Dies; Active Until Age 86 As Newspaperman

Ernest P. Simon, columnist for The Port Washington News, who was the oldest known working newspaperman on Long Island, died Thursday at St. Francis Hospital in Roslyn, L.I. He was 86 years old and lived in Roslyn Heights.

Mr. Simon started his newspaper career in 1906 at the age of 16, working Saturdays. His job was to pick up the entire press run of 400 copies of The News, a weekly, at the railroad station. He would take the copies, printed in New York City, to the pool table of a nearby hotel, slit the pages and then fold the papers and address them by hand for mail delivery. His pay was 35 cents for the day.

The next year he quit high school and went to work full time for The News as a reporter for $3 a week. His association with the paper was interrupted between 1908 and 1928, when he worked as a cashier at the old Bank of North Hempstead in Port Washington.

Mr. Simon returned to journalism in 1929, when he bought the weekly. He sold it in 1940, but stayed on as editor for 20 years, and remained active on the paper until three weeks before his death.

In recent years he wrote a column, "Port Remembered," a series of historical reminiscences. He also wrote obituaries and kept track of the bookkeeping for legal advertising.

Mr. Simon went to Port Washington in 1902, arriving on the first Long Island Rail Road train to run over the newly extended line. His father was the engineer.

There are no immediate survivors.

A funeral service will be held on Monday at 9 A.M. at the Knowles Funeral Home on Main Street in Port Washington.

RICHARD LYON, 51, DIES; WAS COACH OF FOOTBALL

TROY, N.Y., Sept. 24 (AP)—Richard Lyon, who returned to Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute after football coaching stints at Ithaca and West Point, died last night at the age of 51. The Elnora resident suffered a heart attack after jogging, according to an R.P.I. spokesman.

A graduate of Colgate University in Hamilton, N.Y., and Springfield College in Massachusetts, Mr. Lyon began his collegiate coaching career in 1954 as head coach at R.P.I. Three years later he went to Ithaca College, where his teams compiled a 49-20 record over a period of nine years.

In 1967 he accepted the position of defensive coordinator at Army.

For the last four years, Mr. Lyon had been coordinator of physical education and athletics at R.P.I. He directed the $300,000 renovation of the Troy Armory into the new Alumni Sports and Recreation Center.

SHIRLEY R. BARKER

Shirley R. Barker, who was a talent coordinator for the "Tonight" show starring Johnny Carson in 1967-69, died yesterday in an automobile accident in Kendall Park, N. J. She was 45 years old and had been manager of the Princeton University events office since last May.

Jeanette Chappell Kalt, 79; Poet and a Leader in Tennis

Jeannette Chappell Kalt, a poet and tennis player who for many years had been chairman of the women's ranking committee of the United States Lawn Tennis Association, died yesterday at the Community Hospital in Glen Cove, L.I., at the age of 79. She lived in Locust Valley, L.I.

Mrs. Kalt helped to found the Women's Golf and Tennis Club of Glen Head, L.I., where she was chairman of the tennis committee, and she was an honorary life member of the West Side Tennis Club of Forest Hills, Queens.

Despite her skill at tennis, Mrs. Kalt regarded herself as basically a poet. Jeannette Chappell was her pen name. She had been president of the writer's section of the Pen and Brush Club of New York and of the Women Poets of New York. She was also a member of the Poetry Society of America.

Her poems were published in Saturday Review, The Personalist, The Educational Forum and other periodicals. A volume of her poetry, "Destination Uncharted," was published several years ago by the Golden Quill Press of New Hampshire. She was born in Chicago and attended the Spence School in New York. She is survived by her husband, William M. Kalt.

ARTHUR W. CROSBIE

WILLIMANTIC, Conn., Sept. 24 (UPI)—Arthur W. Crosbie, general manager of the Willimantic Chronicle and a business and civic leader, died yesterday at Windham Memorial Community Hospital. He was 56 years old.

Mr. Crosbie was a past president of the Willimantic Chamber of Commerce and of the Willimantic Young Men's Christian Association.

He is survived by his wife, Lucy Bartlett Crosbie, publisher of the daily newspaper; two sons, Vincent and Kevin, and two sisters, Mrs. Kenneth Studley and Ellen Crosbie.

ESTEBAN FRANCES, ARTIST AND BALLET DESIGNER, 61

Esteban Francés, a Spanish-born artist and theatrical designer who was associated with the New York City Ballet, died Monday following a fall while on a visit to Barcelona. Mr. Francés, who lived in Majorca, was 61 years old.

Before coming to the United States in 1944 he studied painting in Barcelona, in his native Catalonia and in Paris with André Breton. Mr. Francés' ballet designs received high praise, beginning with his initial venture in the theater. This was George Balanchine's New York production of the Stravinsky theater-piece, "Le Renard" in 1947 for Ballet Society, the precursor to the New York City Ballet. John Martin, then the dance critic of The New York Times, wrote that Mr. Francés's costumes and sets were "extraordinarily beautiful and make for a pictorial unity that is rare in the ballet."

His best known scenery and costumes were designed for the 1965 Balanchine production of "Don Quixote," which is given annually at the New York State Theater. Other ballets he designed for the company included "Figure in the Carpet," "Tyl Eulenspiegel" and "Con Amore." He also designed the decor of "La Sonnambula."

Schools for Pregnant Girls to Close; Teachers Foresee Harm to Students

By MOLLY IVINS

The city's five Special Schools for Pregnant Girls have had their staffs out of school, her chances of ever making it up and out of poverty are almost nil.

"We are throwing these girls out into the street, that is literally what we are doing," said Hilda Larrier, principal of the Center for Continuing Education on 128th St. "Most of them will never go back to school."

To be 15 years old and pregnant is difficult enough, say teachers at the center, but if on top of that a girl drops out of school, her chances of ever making it up and out of poverty are almost nil.

"I know all the special education programs have been hurt by the budget cuts," said Miss Larrier, "but this is the only one that is being phased out completely."

The budget for the five schools is $579,237.

Miss Larrier, a cheerful, maternal woman, had a slight edge of bitterness in her voice as she said: "I really believe the city took the line of least resistance. They are hurting most those who are least able to defend themselves.

"If they cut the budget for retarded children, the mothers of those children will go down to City Hall and march and protest and picket. But the mothers of these girls, they don't want to go down and picket for their pregnant daughters, to advertise their condition. I can't help believing the city thought of that when they chose to destroy this program completely."

Helen Fuelner, executive director of the Division of Special Education, said: "We are living in a real crisis situation. We are millions of dollars short of what we need to serve handicapped children. We had to make a policy decision to cut everything not mandated by law.

"The law requires us to place every mentally, emotionally and physically handicapped child: these girls do not come under any of these definitions. I assure you, the board decided very reluctantly we would have to phase out these schools."

In theory, pregnant girls can continue to attend regular schools. But it becomes physically difficult for them to get around, especially difficult in schools so crowded that students have to stand during classes or perch on windowsills.

In addition, many of them are suffering from guilt and shame over their pregnancies and it is hard for them to face old classmates. And other children can be cruel, and teasing.

"The very reason this program was started nine years ago was because statistics showed that pregnant girls did not stay in regular schools," said William Nadel, English teacher at the center.

"And statistics now show that there are more and more teen-age pregnancies."

Esprit de Corps Evident

The teachers at the sunny, pleasant, well-equipped center show considerable esprit de corps and enthusiasm for their work. They say they genuinely like the students and speak with pride of their progress and accomplishments.

Peggy Vranesh, social studies teacher, said there are two areas in which she feels regular schools will be totally unable to replace the special schools. Many of the girls at the center were themselves physically abused and brutalized when they were small. The staff puts great emphasis on teaching the girls not to vent their frustrations on their own babies.

Miss Vranesh said they were also particularly concerned with teaching the girls about nutrition. "Since this program started," she said, "There has been a noticeable decline in the general health and eating habits of the teen-agers we see. They have no comprehension of nutrition. What they eat would make a doctor just die."

The center has several special programs. Albert Zaldivar heads a bilingual education program and there are courses in prenatal and postnatal care. In addition, the teachers work with the girls' families, where there are frequently serious problems.

"Some of the family situations are really dreadful," said Miss Vranesh. "Some of our girls are just hanging on by a thread. They need emotional and psychological counseling."

All the teachers seemed convinced that regular public schools could not help "our girls."

CAPANEGRO INDICTED IN EMBEZZLEMENT

Former Queens Assemblyman Cited by U.S. on Charges of Taking $37,000 in Union Funds

By ARNOLD H. LUBASCH

Former Assemblyman Michael Capanegro of Queens was indicted yesterday on Federal charges of embezzling $37,000 from Local 1101 of the Communications Workers of America.

Mr. Capanegro, a 49-year-old lawyer who lives at 32-38 168th Street in Flushing, Queens, served two terms as a Democrat in the State Assembly from 1961 to 1965.

Last week, in a Democratic primary election, Mr. Capanegro was defeated by William H. Caulfield in a battle for the party's nomination for a seat in the State Senate from the 11th Senatorial District in Queens.

Action Alleged During Strike

The 24-count indictment of Mr. Capanegro charged that he had "embezzled, extracted and converted to his own use" funds of Local 1101 during a telephone company strike in 1971 and 1972, when he was the union's counsel. He allegedly submitted bills to the union for legal services that were not performed or were "vastly overstated."

United States Attorney Robert B. Fiske Jr. said that the indictment resulted from a two-year investigation by his office and the United States Department of Labor.

Don D. Buchwald, the prosecutor who presented the case to a Federal grand jury in Manhattan, said that Mr. Capanegro would be arraigned on the indictment next Thursday in the Federal District Court at Foley Square. If convicted, the defendant could face up to five years in prison and a maximum fine of $10,000 on each count in the indictment.

Efforts to reach Mr. Capanegro yesterday for comment on the charges against him were unsuccessful.

According to the indictment, Mr. Capanegro submitted 24 bills during a three-month period from December 1971 to February 1972 for legal services that he said he had performed for union members. The bills, ranging from $250 to $5,400, were paid by the union's defense fund.

The indictment said that Mr. Capanegro had submitted the bills "for legal services allegedly rendered by him" for 24 individual members of Local 1101 when he knew that "he had not in fact performed the claimed services and that said bills vastly overstated the nature and value of the services performed."

Mr. Capanegro, an Air Force veteran, is a graduate of New York University and Cornell Law School. He is a former nightclub performer whose name was linked with Connie Francis, the singer, several years ago.

Youth Burned by Wire

A Princeton University student from New York City was burned seriously when he came in contact with a high-voltage wire after he and a companion climbed atop a commuter railroad car. The student, Blair Richardson, 20 years old, of 215 East 73d Street, was in serious condition at the Princeton Medical Center with burns of his body, face, hands and feet. He will be transferred to the burn center of the Brook Army Hospital in San Antonio.

Catherine Carter, 18, of Greenville, Miss., who was walking with Mr. Richardson at the time, was also treated for burns. A freshman at Princeton, she is the daughter of Hodding Carter 3d, executive editor of The Greenville Delta Democrat Times.

4 Sentenced as Vandals

Four Staten Island residents, convicted last June in a conspiracy to vandalize the home of a black family in their predominantly white New Dorp area community, were sentenced in Federal Court in Brooklyn to jail terms ranging from one to 18 months. Anthony Vivelo, a New York City police sergeant, received the 18-month prison sentence; Albert Anzelone, a businessman, one-year jail term; Nicholas Lombardi, a corrections officer, two months in jail, and Robert Barbieri, a retired housing police sergeant, one month in jail. They were convicted of having damaged a house at 351 Milton Avenue that had been rented by Mr. and Mrs. Alberto Charles.

Court Delays Release

JoAnne Brown, who was found not guilty by reason of mental defect in the slaying of Burr C. Hollister, a Supreme Court justice's law secretary found shot in his office in the State Supreme Court building in Mineola, L. I., on Sept. 29, 1974, failed to win her freedom until conditions for her release have been established. Judge Bernard Thomson of Nassau County Court has said he would not release the 33-year-old mother of three children, as recommended by the State Department of Mental Hygiene, until an ordr is drawn requiring her to continue psychiatric therapy after the court frees her. It is expected it will take about a week for the order to be drawn and approved.

Queens Rabbi Sentenced

Rabbi Elyakim G. Rosenblatt of Briarwood, Queens, was sentenced to six months in prison and fined $8,000 on a conspiracy charge involving $180,000 in checks that he cashed for a postal service employee who had stolen them. Judge Constance Baker Motley imposed the sentence in Federal District Court in Manhattan. Rabbi Rosenblatt, 43 years old, heads the Grand Central Synagogue in Briarwood, the Rabbinical College of Queens and the Beth Jacob Seminary of Queens. He maintained that he was an innocent dupe in cashing the stolen checks.

Hospital Aide Guilty

An attendant at the state psychiatric hospital in Marlboro was found guilty of assaulting a geriatric patient. The attendant, Paul Crank of Red Bank, was fined $75, given a 10-day suspended jail sentence and placed on six-month's probation in municipal court for pushing a patient to the floor and kicking him. Hospital officials said they would hold a dismissal hearing on Mr. Crank next week.

U.S. Interference Charged in Summer Food Program

By RICHARD J. MEISLIN

New York State education authorities said yesterday that their ability to prevent and curb abuses in the summer free-food program for needy children had been stymied by poor Federal regulations and "political interference" by members of Congress and their staffs.

They suggested that unless the State Education Department could be given "relatively unrestricted administrative prerogatives" in the program's operation, "the department should not accept this responsibility for 1977."

But the general feeling of members of the Board of Regents in Albany, to which the charges were made, was that they should wait for the State Education Department to recommend changes in legislation and regulations governing the problem-plagued program before deciding whether to run the program for summer of 1977.

The charges were contained in a report delivered by Harold E. Newcomb, chairman of the Regents Committee on Elementary, Secondary and Continuing Education. The report did not cite any Congressman by name, and officials—including State Education Commissioner Ewald B. Nyquist—later declined to elaborate on the report.

However, they said that interference had come both from those seeking to compel the state to take action against operators of food distribution sites and those seeking to prevent the state from taking action against operators of food-distribution sites.

The Summer Food Service Program, expected to cost $63 million to $73 million for New York State this year, is intended to provide free meals to children of low-income families as a summer counterpart to the school lunch program. It is administered by the State Education Department with Federal funds.

Critics have cited instances of waste, theft and profiteering in some organizations' handling of food distribution sites and have accused the state of mismanaging this summer's program.

Dr. Thomas H. Calvin, state administrator of the program, said earlier this week that the changes the state would propose would be designed mostly to give it greater leeway in refusing to allow an organization to become a food distributor.

Under current rules of the United States Agriculture Department, the major qualification for becoming a distributor of free meals to children is that an organization be an educational, charitable or religious group that qualifies for "nonprofit" status from the Internal Revenue Service.

Dr. Calvin said the state was also investigating the possibility of running part or all of the program through the city's school system, but acknowledged that administrative financing would have to be greater than that currently allowed by the Agriculture Department.

He said that his department was continuing its planning for the 1977 program. The State Education Department is expected to receive its first funds for the administration of next year's program at the beginning of October.

Meanwhile, Agriculture Department officials said that a freeze they had ordered on payments in the summer free-food program for children here was "good management," and would allow the state to take advantage of Agriculture Department investigations into the program. The officials would not comment directly on charges by Dr. Calvin that the unusual freeze of financing had resulted from "political presure."

Columbia Strike Set for Monday By Nonprofessional Employees

Maintenance employees and guards at Columbia University have authorized a strike for 6 A.M. Monday because of an impasse in their efforts to negotiate a new contract providing higher wages.

Leaders of Local 241 of the Transport Workers Union, representing the 700 employees involved, sent a telegram yesterday to Dr. William J. McGill, Columbia's president, asking him to help avert the threatened walkout.

The workers, whose pay ranges from $3.85 an hour for cleaning personnel to $8.98 an hour for power engineers, have been seeking a pay increase of about 5 percent a year in a two-year contract.

Hearing on Parking Tickets Is Halted by an Injunction

By GEORGE GOODMAN Jr.

Acting at the request of New York City's Parking Violations Bureau, a State Supreme Court justice yesterday halted a Civil Court hearing that has become an examination into the way the city issues parking tickets.

"I have no choice but to follow the law and adjourn," said Judge Norman H. Shilling, visibly surprised when the city's assistant corporation counsel, Patrick J. Rooney, walked up to the bench and handed over a writ halting the proceedings.

Meanwhile Carl E. Person, the lawyer for Stephen Browne, the man who brought the Civil Court action asserting he had been wrongly fined $250 in parking violations, said that he had heard from nearly 400 other "victims" with similar tales of improper ticketing.

Justice John A. Monteleone signed the injunction blocking the proceeding and setting a hearing for Tuesday. It was based on a court directive, issued in August 1972, that says that when a ruling by a parking violations hearing officer is contested, the State Supreme Court has jurisdiction for handling appeals.

Outside the courtroom, William De Graphenreid of 317 West 75th Street, an upholsterer whose planned testimoy had been halted by the injunction, showed correspondence he said had been mailed without getting "any response" to the Parking Enforcement Squad. He said that he and members of his block association had unsuccessfully complained to the enforcement bureau about improper ticketing and towing of vehicles on 75th Street.

Parking signs on the street indicate only that parking is prohibited between the hours of 7 A.M. and 4 P.M. on school days, he said.

"Cars are ticketed and towed outside the Manhattan Day School even during the summer when there is no indication that school is in session," Mr. De Graphenreid said.

On one occasion, he added, "police threatened to tow a car belonging to a doorman that was legally parked."

They stopped, he said, only after the doorman threatened to accompany the car to the pound. "They said they were going to call a squad car, but they stopped when neighbors protested," Mr. De Graphenreid said.

"That was the last straw," he continued, "between August and September I wrote and telephoned the 20th Precinct maybe 10 times."

After a complaint to the Internal Affairs Division of the Police Department, Mr. De Graphenreid said, he was notified yesterday that the matter would be investigated by the Parking Violations Bureau.

"It's Catch-22," he said. "It could have been avoided by posting signs saying 'Summer School Is in Session' but instead hundreds of people are tricked into paying fines for the city's revenue benefit.'"

Another frustrated would-be witness, Pamela O'Shaughnessy, a Bay Ridge, Brooklyn, real estate agent said she had apprehended someone ticketing her car with five minutes left on the meter.

"The guy told me he didn't think I would return in time," she said. "He looked embarrassed but put the ticket under the window and walked away."

Ira J. Raab, the general counsel for the Parking Enforcement Agents Local 1182, said yesterday that the city's budget crisis had resulted in a policy of quota requirements for parking enforcement agents.

The Parking Violations Bureau has said that it has "work standards" for enforcement agents, but denies that these are quotas.

Over-the-Counter Quotations

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1976

Quotations supplied through NASDAQ as of 4:00 P.M. Quotes do not include retail markup, markdown or commissions. Volume represents shares that changed ownership during the day. Figures include only transactions by NASDAQ market-makers but may include some duplication where market makers traded with each other.

American Bank Funds By Interest From Swiss

Late last year, Mr. Graiver agreed to buy a majority interest in the American Bank and Trust from a Swiss corporation and it was thought the application would be approved routinely. Snags quickly developed, however.

Juan Graiver pledged to state authorities that he would not draw on American Bank for the funds he needed to purchase it. But, according to legal documents filed by the State Banking Department, he did.

On Dec. 31, Mr. Graiver, to provide the bank with new funds, bought a $1 million note from it with a check drawn on his personal account at the bank. The account at the time contained only $200 and to balance the deduction for the check, the records show a $1 million credit.

Where did the $1 million credit come from? From an account at American Bank maintained by Bankers International, a Luxembourg corporation owned by the Graivers, which, the examiners say, ended the day overdrawn by more than $1 million.

Another Graiver technique, the regulatory authorities allege, was to lend family interests millions of dollars—$22.4 million, almost equal to the bank's capital, at the peak—and then try to mislead the bank examiners. On March 4, on the eve of a scheduled examination by Federal and state authorities, the Graivers owed $15 million. A day later, the loan had been reduced to $7 million.

This was accomplished primarily by taking from an account held at American Bank by the Banque pour L'Amerique du Sud, a Brussels bank, also owned by the Graivers. After the examination date, funds were shifted in the other direction and loans to the Graivers at the American Bank shot upward.

Bank examiners believe that many of these transfers were designed to help the Graivers' Brussels bank, which was then having problems. At the end of each of four successive months, according to state bank regulators, the American Bank advanced $3 million or $4 million to the Brussels bank, reversing the transfers on the first business day of the next month.

On Sept. 13, largely as a result of such machinations, regulators contend, this bank failed and as much as $40 million in its funds is missing and be-

STOCKS DECLINE 1.49 AS TRADING DROPS; WEEK'S GAIN IS 14.21

Analysts Attribute the Daily Drop to Concern That Fed May Have to Tighten Monetary Policy

By ALEXANDER R. HAMMER

Concern that the Federal Reserve Board may be temporarily forced to tighten its monetary policy sent stock prices down slightly yesterday in slower trading.

Prices on the New York Stock Exchange moved in a narrow and lower range throughout the session, the Dow Jones industrial average closing off 1.49 point at 1,009.31. For the week the key barometer was up 14.21 points.

Yesterday's weakness followed the report of the Fed after the market closed Thursday that the nation's basic money supply during the latest reporting week climbed by $4.5 billion.

Analysts said the news came as a depressant to expectations that the Fed would pursue a more relaxed credit policy and would thus encourage another decline in basic interest rates.

An announcement by Citicorp, a trend setter and the second largest bank in the nation after the Bank of America, of a reduction in its prime lending rate to 6¾ percent from 7 percent did little to spur buying. Earlier this week, several other major banks cut their prime rate to 6¾ percent.

Retail Sales Decline a Factor

Investors were also disturbed by the 4.1 percent plunge in last week's retail sales announced Thursday and by the 11.7 percent drop in non-defense capital spending and a 2.2 percent slide in overall durable goods orders during August.

Gene J. Seagle of Evans & Company noted that the market's strength this week was underlined by its ability to ride "over recent bad economic news." He said this was apparent yesterday by the ease with which it took the increase in the Federal Reserve's money figures.

Mr. Seagle said that the big jump in volume to over 30 million shares through the 1,000 level to new highs since 1973 this week indicated that "we have embarked on another leg of th major upward move with only minor setbacks along the way."

Turnover on the exchange yesterday dropped to 17.40 million shares, the slowest of the week, from 24.21 million shares Thursday. The week's turnover soared to 126.56 milion shares from 97.11 million shares in the preceding week.

Consolidated trading of stocks listed on the exchange fell to 20.19 million shares from 28.91 million shares on Thursday.

Among the 15 most actively traded issues, seven rose, seven fell and one was unchanged. The volume leader was Polaroid, which gained ¾ to 44 on a turnover of 200,200 shares, including several blocks of 10,000 shares or more. The stock in recent sessions has been strong and reached a 1976 high earlier this week of 44¾.

National Semiconductor Gains

One of the stronger gainers on the most-active list was National Semiconductor, which rose 1⅛ to 36⅛. On Thursday the stock fell 3½ after a company official said the company was expected to report lower profits for the first fiscal quarter ended Sept. 21.

Belco Petroleum, which rose 1⅜ Thursday, added 1¼ to 22⅜ yesterday. The stock sold as high as 22½ early in the

Potato Penalties Disputed At Mercantile Exchange

A Governor Threatens to Seek President's Ouster

By TERRY ROBARDS

A rebellion has erupted at the New York Mercantile Exchange over the negotiations to impose penalties on the defaulters in the Maine potato trading scandal that shook the commodities market last spring.

Salvatore Calcaterra, a governor of the exchange, stormed out of a board meeting Thursday afternoon in a dispute directly related to the potato default and threatened yesterday to file lawsuits to remove the exchange's administration and governing board.

In reply, Richard B. Levine, president of the Mercantile Exchange, charged yesterday in an interview that Mr. Calcaterra had misrepresented the facts and had engaged in conduct that might subject him to disciplinary proceedings.

Dispute Involves Fines

The dispute revolves around fines and other penalties that may be levied against three member brokerage firms that were involved in defaulting on 1,000 contracts for the delivery of 50 million pounds of Maine potatoes last May

The three firms had acted on behalf of at least two prominent commodities speculators, Jack Richard Simplot of Boise, Idaho, who is known as the "Idaho potato king," and Pete J. Taggares of Othello, Wash. Through the firms, they had sold contracts to deliver the Maine potatoes and then failed to make the deliveries.

The 104-year-old Mercantile Exchange, which has the responsibility to police the trading on its cluttered floor at 6 Harrison Street in downtown Manhattan, has been trying to work out penalties against the firms.

Final Stages Approached

The exchange does not have direct jurisdiction over the firms' customers, so penalties must be negotiated that the firms can pass along to the customers who defaulted.

The negotiations had apparently been approaching their final stages when Mr. Calcaterra veiced strenuous objections and walked out of Thursday's board meeting.

Because only five of the exchange's 15 governors were at the meeting and five members are required for a quorum, Mr. Calcaterra's angry departure prevented the board from acting on a draft stipulation relating to the penalties.

Mr. Calcaterra wrote a letter to Mr. Levine yesterday morning and distributed copies on the trading floor to other exchange members. He also sent a copy to the Commodity Futures Trading Commission in Washington, which has regula-

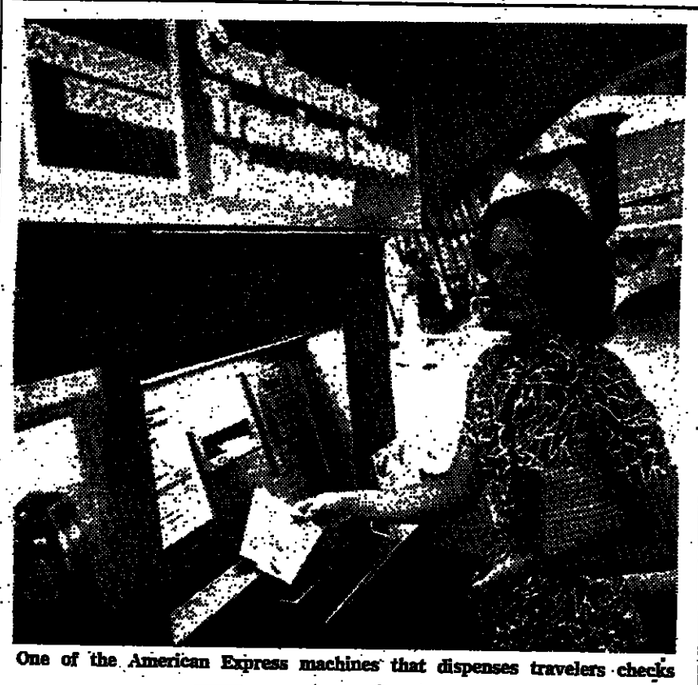
Machines Dispense Travelers Checks



One of the American Express machines that dispenses travelers checks

By LEONARD SLOANE

Travelers checks, which have been growing in popularity among both pleasure and business travelers because of their safety and convenience, now represent an industry with approximate volume in the United States of $8 billion. The American Express Company sells a majority of all travelers checks purchased in this country, with many other companies—including Citibank and the Bank of America—also participating in this market.

Most of these checks are obtained at banks and financial institutions, but because of their limited hours of business, marketers have long sought new outlets for these products. The latest way to merchandise them came into public view last month as a result of advances in computer technology.

Travelers checks can now be purchased from machines by holders of American Express cards at 16 airline terminals throughout the United States, including New York's Kennedy and La Guardia airports. This system, however, has a limit of $500 worth of checks a week.

Designed to assist travelers, particularly businessmen, who require emergency funds, the procedure requires the use of a four-digit personal identification number that must be obtained by application from the company in advance. What this does, in effect, is authorize a designated bank to debit the required funds from a person's account whenever he operates the machine.

Once this authorization is completed, a cardholder can obtain travelers checks—those issued by American Express, of course —from one of the airport dispensers by inserting the card and indicating the identification number and the amount desired. A drawer will then open with the checks in $20 denominations and a receipt.

The cost of the checks is the same $1 per $100 charged wherever they are sold. A telephone is attached to the dispenser so that those using the system can ask questions or receive information.

Municipal Bond Funds And Tax Reform Act

The new Tax Reform Act, awaiting President Ford's expected signature, could lead to a new wrinkle in the fast-moving and rapidly growing field of municipal bond funds.

It may take a scorecard to keep up with all of the changes over the last year. For after more than a decade of having one basic kind of fund—the closed-end unit investment trust with a fixed portfolio—the first major change came early in 1976 with the development of the open-end approach to tax-exempt bond funds.

These mutual fund vehicles for municipals have had to operate until now as limited partnerships, however, because of the tax laws. If they had been corporations, the dividends to shareholders would have been taxable, thereby eliminating the major incentive for an investment program involving municipal bonds. And if they had been trusts that actively manage their portfolios, they also would have lost their Federal tax exemption.

The reform law forges this requirement by permitting the traditional corporate form for municipal bond funds with a tax-exempt pass-through to

Frances Raises Cost Of Fuel to Cut Use

By CLYDE H. FARNSWORTH

Special to The New York Times

PARIS, Sept. 24 — France has now moved where the United States has not by raising fuel prices sharply to discourage energy use and save on petroleum imports.

Under an economic program announced Wednesday by Prime Minister Raymond Barre, France is getting the highest gasoline prices in Europe, and probably in the world.

The new price here of more than $2 a gallon is three and one half times the average American level of 60 cents and compares, according to a tabulation made last month, with $1.80 in Italy, $1.50 in Japan and Britain, $1.40 in Switzerland and $1.30 in West Germany.

Nearly two years aga a number of Western nations under a United States initiative banded together to form the International Energy Agency. They said they would pool their oil supplies in case of another embargo, cooperate on developing alternate energy sources and promote conservation efforts.

There are now 19 countries in the Self-Regulating Agency Proposed For Commodities Industry Group

By ROBERT D. HERSHEY Jr.

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24—The Commodities Futures Trading Commission has received a formal proposal from an industry group seeking to set up a self-regulatory body that would function much like the National Association of Securities Dealers in the securities business, William T. Bagley, commission chairman, disclosed today.

The new agency, which has been named the National Futures Association, would supplement the commission's regulation in areas where the 18-month-old Federal agency has questionable or only indirect authority.

The impetus for this proposal came from the heads of the Chicago Board of Trade and the Chicago Mercantile Exchange, which together account for more than two-thirds of commodity market volume.

Meanwhile, a separate but somewhat overlapping plan is under consideration by the Futures Industry Association, based in New York.

The so-called Chicago plan, just received in writing by the agency, provides a mechanism by which the industry itself would make and enforce rules, subject to oversight by the commission in several areas.

These, according to Leo Melamed, head of the Chicago Mercantile Exchange, include examination and licensing of commodity brokers, arbitration of customer complaints and the financing and practices of market operators who are not members of any exchange.

Mr. Melamed declined today to describe how the proposed agency would be organized, but Mr. Bagley said the board would be composed of 15 members—one from each of the five biggest exchanges, five from brokerage houses and five from commercial operators such as millers or chocolate manufacturers.

However, Mr. Bagley said he hoped that room could be found on this board for representatives of the general public, probably at the expense of market users.

The five biggest exchanges are the Chicago Board of Trade; the Chicago Mercantile Exchange; the Commodity Exchange Inc., New York; the MidAmerica Commodity Exchange, Chicago, and the

For the Canadian Wheat Grower, Record Crop and Life of Comfort

By ROBERT TRUMBULL

Special to The New York Times

MARSDEN, Saskatchewan, Sept. 16 —A feeling of expectation pervades the farms served by this small railhead town and many others like it across the Canadian wheat belt. With a record crop assured, such growers as Lloyd Dingman and Maurice Palmer, with farms near here, expect to make their annual trek southward with fuller wallets than usual this winter.

Statistics Canada, the Government information gathering agency, has forecast a nationwide wheat output of 839.5 million bushels this year, beating the 1966 record of 827 million bushels and surpassing the average annual output in recent times by at least 40 percent.

"This is the best year we've had, and that's the story, right across the province," Edgar Keading, Minister of Agriculture in the Saskatchewan provincial government and a lifelong farmer, said in an recent interview in his office in Regina, the capital.

However, whether this turns out to be a windfall year for rural bank accounts, thanks to unusually favorable weather, or one of just ordinary profits will depend upon complex market factors.

Prices are down sharply due to slack demand because of good crops elsewhere, according to industry sources, but Canadian wheat experts believe that the drop may be more than offset by the higher return on the premium quality of Canadian wheat this season.

In any case, the fortunate turn has come at a time of significant structural change in the Saskatchewan farming region, which produces two-thirds of Canada's wheat.

With inflation driving up the price of agricultural machinery and other costs, the small family farm is disappearing. Mr. Dingman, for instance, feels that his relatively modest holding of 315 acres, which provides him with a net income of $20,000 to $25,000 a year, would inevitably be absorbed by a neighboring owner if he decided to sell.

Meanwhile, the consensus around Marsden, a typical prairie settlement of a few hundred families and the usual country shopping facilities clustered around a railroad station, with a grain elevator towering over all, is that the farmers' lot is pretty comfortable these days.

"The life style of the farmer hereabouts compares with that of the upper middle class city dweller, or is a little better," said Jerry Groenen, spect. For us to make it seem to be is worse than ineffectual; it only deepens disbelief."

Business Is Blamed For Regulation Rise

On the subject of inconsistency, Mr. Murphy said that while business was opposed to handouts, except those used to bail out business, it opposed Government regulation, except those that protected against foreign competition, and that it was against price controls, but not wage controls.

Saying that "the clock is running out on free enterprise and it is later than we think," Mr. Murphy said business could win its battle against more regulation, if it would emphasize quality as well as quantity in its products, focus on service as well as sales and "welcome criticism and act on it rather than avoid and condemn it."

REPUBLIC OF NIGER
(ELECTRICITY BOARD OF NIGER)
TRANSMISSION LINES AND SWITCHYARDS ASSOCIATED WITH ANOU-ARAREN PROJECT
INTERNATIONAL INVITATION FOR PREQUALIFICATION

Société Nigérienne d'Electricité (NIGELEC) intends to launch, in the near future, a call for tender, for the construction of high and medium tension, transmission lines and switchyards, associated with the thermal power plant of ANOU-ARAREN, near AGADES. Design and control of work are entrusted to ELECTRICITE DE FRANCE—DIRECTION DES AFFAIRES EXTERIEURES ET DE LA COOPERATION (EDF-DAFECO).

The equipment will comprise:
—One 132 kV, 180 km long, transmission line, linking the ANOU-ARAREN site to the AKOKAN Centre.
—One 132 kV switchyard at ANOU ARAREN.
—One 132/20 kV switchyard at AKOKAN.
—One 20 kV, 45 km long transmission line, linking the ANOU-ARAREN site to AGADES town.

All civil engineering works, supply of equipment and transportation, erection and starting-up should be included in a single offer. To this offer may be added a financial proposal either from the tenderers, or from their country financial institutions.

The interested companies must apply both to:
B.P. 202
NIAMEY—Republic of NIGER
and to:
E.D.F.—DAFECO
68, rue du Faubourg Saint Honoré
75008—PARIS (France)

before October 15th 1976, giving their references of similar installations supplied, on a turn-key basis, particularly in tropical countries.

In the second half of October 1976, the tender file will be sent to the selected companies and their tender should be received before February 1st 1977.

session, its highest price since 1971, when it traded at 23⅛.

A sizable portion of Belco's income comes from Peru, where it has production sharing arrangement with Petroperu, a Government-owned oil company. Earlier this year the price of Peruvian crude oil was increased from $8 a barrel to $10.75 a barrel.

Standard Brands, also on the active list, lost 1¼ to 29⅝ following a loss of 3⅛ points Thursday when the company said it expected its earnings to show little gain this year.

The Gannett Company, which operates a chain of newspapers, added ⅜ to 39⅝. Allen H. Neuharth, president and chief executive officer, said the company's earnings should rise to between $2.20 and $2.30 this year from $1.80 a share in 1975.

Holly Sugar fell ⅞ to 38⅛. The company reported yesterday that it had revised, at the insistence of the Securities & Exchange Commission, its accounting treatment of a previously reported $4.2 million conditional antitrust litigation payment that has the effect of reducing net income for the year ended March 31 to $17.3 million from $21.5 million.

The Haifes Corporation rose ⅞ to 19⅞ in brisk trading. The textile company announced late Thursday that it expected to report record third quarter profits.

Ex-Cell-O Corporation, a major manufacturer of precision parts and tools for the aircraft and automotive market, slipped to 21½ even though the company reported that its August quarter profits rose to 74 cents a share from 68 cents a share a year earlier.

Amex and O-T-C Irregular

Prices on the American Stock Exchange and in the over-the-counter market finished mixed in moderate trading.

The Cubic Corporation added ¾ to 13¼ on the Amex. The company said it expected to report record 1976 earnings of more than $2 a share up from last year's record profits of $1.22 a share.

One of the largest gainers was Masoneilan International, which advanced 4¾ to 39. The company, which is 78 percent owned by Studebaker-Worthington, announced that negotiations were being resumed for Studebaker to acquire the outstanding Masoneilan shares it does not already own. Masoneilan develops and manufactures automatic process control equipment for use in a wide range of industries.

The Amex market-value index closed up 0.02 at 103.68, with the average price of a share up 1 cent. However, declines led advances by a narrow margin.

Options traded on the Amex dropped to 32,708 contracts from Thursday's 41,411. On the Chicago Board Options Exchange, 69,458 contracts were traded, down frm 95,510 on Thursday.

In the counter market, the NASDAQ industrial index rose 0.16 to 95.54 while the composite index gained 0.04 to 92.31. However, declines outnumber advances by 372 to 353.

Helping Spastic Patients Work as T

By STACY V. JONES
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24—The head of a nonprofit Washington institute who has invented various ways of helping the disabled to communicate and operate equipment has expanded his system to serve those subject to involuntary actions — sufferers from spastics. Haig Kafafian, president of the Cybernetics Research Institute, was granted Patent 3,982,236 this week for "communications and control method and apparatus for persons who may have muscular incoordination and-or spasticity.

Patents of the Week

Sufferers from these conditions often repeat, through involuntary muscular contractions, pressure on typewriter or computer keys. The invention prevents such repetition until a fixed time has elapsed.

Mr. Kafafian has given a free license under his patents to the New Jersey Institute of Technology in Newark, which is experimenting with computer use for home-confined children.

Among the earlier Kafafian inventions are Cybercom instruments that permit a user, who cannot speak or move his fingers, to operate devices with chin, elbow, foot or breath. He has devised a number of keyboards or interfaces that enable the severely handicapped to control machinery and computer terminals and create artificial speech. In research funded by the Bureau of Education for the Handicapped, Mr. Kafafian invented a new form of Braille to eliminate ambiguities.

This week's patent provides that the time delay interval may be controlled according to the person's need. A sensor signal can indicate when the disabling period has expired. The invention is being applied to a deaf-blind project supported by the Rehabilitation Services Administration.

Of Unknown Material Learning the Purity

At the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in Cambridge, a method has been devised for nondestructively determining the composition of purity of an unknown material.

Patent 3,981,175, which was granted this week to Ogden H. Hammond 3d, a lecturer in chemical engineering, and Francis L Baratta, formerly at the Center for Advanced Engineering Study, illustrates operation by the thermal testing of samples of gold or silver. The apparatus is to be of a size to rest on a desk counter, and to require little mechanical skill. Transacions in gold or silver bars often take place in banks.

tory responsibility for the Mercantile exchange.

A spokesman for the commission, reached by telephone, said the letter had not yet been received. "We have received nothing from the New York Merc about this matter," he said. But he noted that any penalties meted out by the exchange could, if requested, be reviewed by the commission.

In his letter, which was addressed to Mr. Levine, Mr. Calcaterra wrote: "The meeting held yesterday was the ultimate insult not only to me but to the entire membership as well. To have the attorney of the New York Mercantile Exchange offer for a vote a stipulation and consent agreement so grossly one-sided was something it could not tolerate.

"The agreement, if approved by the board, would require the exchange to completely eliminate from past events all reference to the default when, in fact, there was a default. The agreement would prevent the exchange from disciplining through expulsion or suspension the clearing house members who have in fact defaulted.

"This I think is too much to ask of me as a board member, and of the entire membership." Mr. Calcaterra then apologized for walking out of the meeting.

stockholders, though, as long as at least 50 percent of the fund's assets consist of such bonds each quarter. As a result, one of the two open-end funds now in existence is already planning to convert from a limited partnership to a corporation and many similar funds are expected to be formed soon.

The concept of a fund composed entirely of municipal bonds was developed by John Nuveen & Company, an investment concern that specializes in municipals. It was the first to sell this idea to the public, using many of the same reasons that marketers of common-stock, fixed-income money-market and other mutual funds have used — diversification, professional management and continuous redemption at net asset value.

Since the first Nuveen unit investment trust was issued in 1961, bringing individual investors into a market that had largely been the province of institutions, about 15 brokerage firms including some of the largest, and investment bankers, have sponsored other trusts. An estimated $7 billion worth of these self-liquidating unit trusts, frequently with long maturities, have thus far been purchased, including a record $2.18 billion last year alone.

Typically, a unit trust contains between $25 million and $50 million worth of municipal bonds and is sold in units of from $100 to $1,000. Minimum investments range from $1,000 to $5,000, while sales charges vary from 2 to 4½ percent —with the highest fees usually applying to the smallest purchases.

With the increased interest in municipal bonds in recent years—due to rising interest rates, an erratic stock market, higher incomes resulting in higher tax burdens, relatively low risk in most situations and other factors—new ways were sought to obtain increased public involvement. One of the most far-reaching was the development of the limited partnership continuously offered funds, following a favorable ruling from the Internal Revenue Service.

The first to reach the market was the Kemper Municipal Bond Fund, sponsored by a subsidiary of the Kemper Corporation. When it was issued last April, potential investors were told that the fund would buy and sell bonds of varying maturities for its portfolio according to changing market conditions. In contrast, the closed-end trusts are static and cannot sell securities unless they are in or near default.

The Kemper fund charges a sales fee of 4.75 percent for investments under $25,000 and an annual management fee of 0.45 percent of average net assets. Its minimum initial outlay requirement is $100, but additional investments of as low as $25 can be made.

The other open-end limited partnership is the Fidelity Municipal Bond Fund, which was issued last month by the Fidelity Management and Research Company. It differs from Kemper in that it is a "no load" fund—one without a sales charge—but it does have a management fee of 0.40 percent.

Both of the open-end funds, like other mutual funds, provide for the optional reinvestment of net income, thus allowing in this case a compounding of the tax-free earnings. They also offer the privilege of exchanging shares in the municipal bond funds for those in other funds sponsored by the same investment organization.

Many patrons, even those with moderate amounts to invest, would still prefer to buy and manage their municipal bonds directly, rather than through any form of trust or fund. But with the anticipated entry of additional sponsoring organizations to the municipal bond fund area when the President signs the new tax law as anticipated, the small investor can expect to hear more, see more, learn more—and perhaps purchase more—of this type of investment than ever before.

How to Save Money On Partial Tax Payments

If you owe the Internal Revenue Service money for back taxes and are ready to make part, but not all, of the payment, you can save money by specifying how much is principal and how much is interest. For if you do not specify, the I.R.S. will first apply the funds to principal until it is fully paid.

However, the amount designated as interest can be deducted on your current return. But this decision cannot be made, according to Prentice-Hall, the tax-information publisher, at the time you claim the deduction on your return. It must be done when the payment is sent to the I.R.S.

When paying back taxes, therefore, either write separate checks identified as payments for principal and interest or include a letter allocating the individual amounts with a single check. Remember, though, there may be circumstances when it is advantageous to allocate most or all of the money to principal and thereby reduce future interest payments.

Mexican Labor Movement, Accepting 23% Pay Rise, Calls Off National Strike

By ALAN RIDING
Special to The New York Times

MEXICO CITY, Sept. 24—Under strong pressure from the Government, Mexico's labor movement today called off a planned nationwide strike and accepted an emergency wage increase of 23 percent to compensate for inflation since the Mexican peso was devalued last month.

But labor leaders, who had originally called for a 65 percent increase compared with an offer of just 10 percent from the private sector, warned that they would make new wage demands unless prices were controlled.

On the other hand, Joaquin Pria Olavarrieta, president of the National Chamber of the Manufacturing Industry, said the wage increase would be seen only as a recommendation since some small companies would be bankrupted if forced to pay the new rates.

According to the agreement reached early this morning after President Luis Echeverria Alvarez joined labor and industrial leaders, those earning less than $500 per month will receive a 23 percent increase, those earning between $500 and $1,000 will get 21 percent, and all salaries above $1,000 per month will rise by 16 percent.

Following the agreement, Mr. Echeverria urged labor and management to "make a maximum effort to increase productivity, which is the only way of increasing our competitive strength abroad."

Having successfully held down the wage increase to a level that most businessmen consider "reasonable under the circumstances," the Government now faces the greater challenge of bringing prices under control.

The Ministry of Industry and Commerce this morning announced that essential products, the prices of which are Government controlled, would have to increase in cost by 10 percent. But the Ministry also continues to threaten "speculators" with jail terms if they raise prices unjustifiably.

Arnaldo R. Catino, president of Bolsas Plasticas in Uruguay, went looking for customers in the United States to whom he could export goods.

...ployed that he went looking for customers in the United States when sales to Argentina and in the domestic market declined last year.

A Macy's Order Too Big

"Until the end of July we had shopping bag sales to the United States of more than $300,000, and they keep coming back for more," Mr. Catino said.

The small company, with plant and equipment worth about $3 million, had to turn down a possible order from Macy's, which wanted two million bags a month. That is more than Bolsas Plasticas can manage, but production is rising to about one million bags monthly, and Mr. Catino and his partners are considering an expansion with a foreign partner.

The relatively low pay for workers in Uruguay is one factor in the export of articles involving hand labor. But another key factor is the exchange policy which has maintained export rates higher than the internal cost increases resulting from inflation.

Uruguay's policy is to increase the value of its raw materials, such as wool, fish, meat and hides, by putting as much processing as possible, or value added by workers, into the exported product, said Brig. José Cardozo, Secretary of Planning in the Government that recently took office.

For this purpose, Uruguay has offered foreign investors a promotional law under which equipment can be brought in without duties, and tax holidays are provided for an initial period to approved investments.

COCOA PRICES JUMP; COFFEE ALSO GAINS

Broker Says That Speculators Run Rampant Through Market— Corn and Soybeans Drop

By ELIZABETH M. FOWLER

December-delivery cocoa jumped the daily trading limit of 4 cents a pound yesterday on the New York Cocoa Exchange to close at $1.14½ a pound.

"Speculators were running rampant," a commodity broker commented yesterday. At these prices, he explained, the manufacturers that use cocoa in their chocolate or other products are on the sidelines.

"Most of them have bought enough to fill their needs until the first of the year, and they are not ringing my telephone to buy," he said.

Short Crop Reported

The interest of speculators in cocoa stems from reports of short crops in some of the major African producing nations, where the picking of the cocoa and bringing it to the central marketing agencies is just getting under way. The season usually runs through January.

A small amount of interest in buying green coffee by roasters managed to bring a large jump in coffee futures yesterday on the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange. December coffee closed at $1.61 a pound, up almost 5 cents.

Coffee is another crop that has been subject to reported shortages, although some commodity experts believe that Brazil, the world's largest coffee producer, has ample supplies but is hoping to keep the prices high.

Recently Brazil has been buying large amounts of coffee offered by nations in Africa and elsewhere. This coffee is used to make freeze-dried varieties or used domestically, while Brazil exports its home-grown coffee.

Corn and soybean prices fell on the Chicago Board of Trade. December corn sagged to $2.71 a bushel, off about 4 cents, while November beans closed at $6.42 a bushel, down 13 cents.

Dollar Eases; Pound Hits a New Low

LONDON, Sept. 24 (AP)—The dollar eased in relation to all major currencies today except the British pound, which closed at a new low. Gold moved up around $1 an ounce in bullion markets.

In Paris the dollar ended the day at 4.91 French francs against 4.9175 yesterday. In Milan it closed at 847.75 Italian lire against 847.8.

But in London at the close it cost only $1.7063 to buy a pound against $1.7110 yesterday.

The price of gold, meanwhile rose to close at $119 an ounce in both London and Zurich, Europe's two main bullion centers. Yesterday it closed at $118 in London and $117.75 in Zurich.

In London, the pound hit its lowest point in four and one-half months and also saw its depreciation against 10 of the world's major currencies, including the dollar, widen to another record low for the third consecutive day.

Its depreciation widened to 42.7 percent below 1971 parities from 42.5 percent yesterday, the Bank of England reported.

[In New York, sterling fell to a record low of $1.6995 today. The fall came in very thin trading after the foreign exchange market had generally closed at $1.70, dealers said. It was the first time the bid rate on the British currency had fallen below $1.70 here.]

Paris dealers said the franc remained steady in relation to the dollar in "fairly agitated" interbank trading after yesterday's tumble from 4.87725 to 4.9175 for $1.

But the franc continued to lose ground against the West German mark and the Swiss franc.

The Financial Times reported the Government might impose an import deposit plan in a bid to curb money supply growth and cut Britain's trade deficit.

This is how the dollar fared at the close of the business day elsewhere in Europe, with the previous day's figures in parentheses:

Frankfurt 2.4750 West German marks (2.4789), Zurich 2.4722 Swiss francs (2.4748), Amsterdam 2.5860 Dutch guilders (2.5855).

A Special Invitation from VALUE LINE

TO INVESTORS WHO USE DISCOUNT BROKERS

. . . and make their own investment decisions

A growing minority of investors are turning to discount brokers to cut commission costs. Generally, this is appropriate only for those who make their own decisions, since most discount brokers do not provide investment research.

So, if you're doing business with a discount broker, you need the best independent research you can get. (Your commission savings on just a few trades may pay for a full year of such assistance.) Here's how Value Line can help:

As an Introductory Bonus, we'd like to send you Value Line's latest full-page Reports on each of 1600 stocks under continual review. These come to you ready for instant use, fully indexed and loose-leaf bound in the Investors Reference Service (sold separately for $45) . . . and will be systematically updated by new Reports in the weeks ahead. Filing takes only one minute a week.

These comprehensive Reports cover almost every stock that's likely to be of interest to you. The 1600 stocks covered by Value Line account for approximately 96% of all dollar trading volume in the U.S. equity markets. With Value Line, you're really "well armed."

A typical Value Line full-page Report on a stock includes 22 series of vital financial and operating statistics—going back 15 years and estimated 3 to 5 years into the future—plus ratings and estimates of relative Price Performance in the next 12 months, long-term percentage Appreciation Potential, Safety, and current Yield and P/E compared to past norms. About 125 Reports are issued every week—1600 every 13 weeks, in regular sequence.

Stocks to Avoid Now

Because Value Line applies uniform standards of evaluation to all 1600 stocks, you can quickly and easily identify which stocks we currently rate relatively best and worst for your particular goals. We especially suggest you avoid the 400 stocks currently rated below average for Performance in the year ahead.

In addition to the full-page Reports, Value Line's key investment ratings and measurements for all 1600 stocks are updated EVERY WEEK in our 24-page weekly Summary of Advices. With Value Line, you are never left "hanging."

Special Invitation

If you're an independent investor—if you call your own shots—you should settle for nothing less than the best. So we invite you to let us send you The Value Line Investment Survey every week for the next 12 months. Plus two immediate bonuses—the two-volume Investors Reference Service (described above) and our penetrating new 64-page guide book, "Investing in Common Stocks."

Money Back Guarantee: You take no risk in accepting this offer. If you're not satisfied with Value Line for any reason at all, just return the material you have received within 30 days for a full refund of your subscription fee.

Or if you prefer—and if no member of your household has subscribed to Value Line in the past two years—you may take an introductory 10-week trial for only $29. You get the same bonuses and the same money-back guarantee.

How the 160,000 or so Canadian grain producers actually made out financially this season will remain uncertain until the Canadian Wheat Board, which strictly controls exports between provinces and abroad, averages out the prices in January for the year just past.

A spokesman for the board said by telephone from its headquarters in Winnepeg, Manitoba, that the price being offered that day was $3.35½ a bushel, compared with $5.31 on the same date a year ago.

The spokesman added that an expected drop in orders from traditional buyers of Canadian grain in the Soviet Union and Europe, where crops also have been good this year, might be made up by sales to new outlets in developing countries such as Indonesia and the Philippines.

With four-fifths of the Canadian crop available for sales abroad, Canada is the second largest wheat exporter in the world, after the United States. This country ranks only fourth or fifth in production, however, following the Soviet Union, which is first, then the United States and India and China, the Wheat Board spokesman said:

There is conjecture that the money was added to the family fortune, already estimated at $40 million to $50 million.

Even before the Graivers arrived, the bank had operated slightly differently, according to those familiar with its workings, basing its prospects on the premise that contacts among the influential are the most direct route to new business.

Its top leadership was Jewish, and its connections among the Jewish elite, particularly in New York, were impeccable. The chairman, Abraham Feinberg, was a major force in Jewish groups and many of the people he met at fund raising dinners ended up putting some of their money in his bank. Howard Samuels, the former head of the Off-Track Betting Corporation, was both a borrower and a depositor.

So was the Arlen Realty and Development Corporation, the holding company headed by Arthur G. Cohen, which has a $1.2 million loan, deemed substandard by the Federal Reserve during its examination because of Arlen's own problems. Arthur's brother Richard was the president of GIT Mortgage Investors, which was where Stanley Kreitman, the president of the bank, last worked. And last year, American Bank and Trust moved from Wall Street to lavish and expensive new quarters in Olympic Tower—which is 40 percent owned by Arlen.

In political circles, Meade Esposito, the Brooklyn Democratic leader, was on the payroll for a while, ostensibly to bring in customers, and at least one person, unable to get credit elsewhere, reports that Mr. Esposito arranged a loan for him at American Bank. And Mayor Beame, while between terms as City Controller, served as chairman of the bank's finance committee and as a director.

Both Mr. Samuels and Mr. Cohen say that their connection to the bank was strictly business. Mr. Esposito did not return repeated telephone calls.

Fed Termed Institution 'Problem Bank' Jan. 29

The bank's political connections also yielded considerable public money in deposits; at its demise, it had $20 million in city and state deposits, more than 10 percent of its total deposits, and a far higher percentage than a bank without such connections could expect.

Although Patrick Cunningham, the Bronx Democratic leader, was indicted last spring for not telling a grand jury that he was paid $50,000 by the bank for legal work that he did not perform in connection with shifting state deposits to the American Bank, nothing that the bank did during this well-connected period has been found to be illegal.

But bank authorities maintain that, despite the connections, the bank has suffered. For more than five years, it had been under surveillance by banking authorities because of its generally shaky loan portfolio and on Jan. 29, 1976, the Federal Reserve listed it as a "problem bank."

A year ago, State Superintendent of Banks John G. Heimann, issued an order accusing the bank of engaging in a number of "unauthorized and unsafe practices," including failing to write off bad loans and overextension of credit without collateral.

For example, in its dealings with John Samuels (who is unrelated to Howard Samuels), the state examination found that the bank apparently flouted the law—it lent more than $12 million or five times the allowable maximum for a single customer to Mr. Samuels's companies and to Mr. Samuels personally. Why it did this is unexplained—Mr. Samuels maintains that he believed that American Bank was merely the head of a consortium.

After that, the bank regulator said recently, American Bank and Trust "continued the unsafe and unauthorized practices." The bank's financial position deteriorated further; deposits fell to $199 million as of June 30, from $229 million on Dec. 31. Loans classified as "substandard, doubtful or loss" rose from $40.5 million as of May 30, 1975, to $55.8 million—more than a third of the total—by Aug. 20, 1976. And the bank was barely making money.

In the spring, the state and Federal banking authorities, having decided that the Graivers would be inappropriate owners, began energetic efforts to find the bank a source of new capital. Just as the regulators were concluding that their efforts would be fruitless, public disclosure by newspapers of the bank's problems on Sept. 13 precipitated an outpouring of deposits from the beleaguered institution, according to sources familiar with the bank's operations.

On the first day, it was $8 million in large time deposits. By the second day, the figure had tripled and the bank was forced to borrow from the Federal Reserve to avoid closing.

The state and Federal authorities quickly decided, in accordance with Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation procedures, to sell the quality assets and liabilities to another bank. A bidding process was begun, and in the end, the Bank Leumi Trust Company of New York, the subsidiary of an Israeli institution, paid a $12 million premium for American Bank.

Two other banks—Sterling National and Republic National—also bid, but the Israeli bid was more than twice the next highest. Did Bank Leumi particularly want to buy a bank so closely identified with Jewish interests, especially when one of American Bank's four branches is a stone's throw from one of Leumi's branches? A spokesman for Leumi maintained that business interests came first but that American Bank's "type of customers" were also a factor.

Today the American Bank and Trust has become Bank Leumi. No depositors or borrowers have been affected. The Graivers have disappeared and so has $18.5 million from American Bank and an additional $40 million from the Brussels bank. Mr. Feinberg and the top officers, who officials close to the situation believe were manipulated by the Graivers as pawns, remain. An, according to bank regulators, American Bank's minority stockholders have little chance of recovering their investment.

Last week signs like this one went up at the American Bank and Trust Company offices here appointing the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation as receiver. The notice came from the New York State Banking Department.

$24 A SHARE IS BID FOR WILLIAMS & CO.

Board to Meet on Offer by Williams Companies, Which Follows One for $22 by Superior Tube

By RONA CHERRY

Williams & Company said yesterday that Williams Companies had made a tender offer for all the outstanding shares of Williams & Company common stock at $24 a share. On the basis of the 1,131,757 shares outstanding, the transactoin would total about $27.2 million. The offer made by The Williams Companies, a manufacturer of fertilizer and metals, based in Tulsa, Okla., follows a tender offer made Sept. 16 by the Superior Tube Company for all outstanding Williams & Company shares at $22 apiece.

Merger News

Officials of Williams & Company said its board would meet shortly to consider the merits and feasibility of the new offer, and suggested that shareholders wait to tender their shares to Superior pending the outcome of the meeting.

Following Superior's offer, directors of William & Company sent a letter to its 1,750 stockholders in which it indicated the board would stay neutral on the offer.

Williams & Company, based in Pittsburgh, sells a variety of metals, including aluminum, copper, nickel and steel, as well as refrigeration, air conditioning, heating and welding supplies.

Terra Resources in Pact To Rejoin Farmland

Farmland Industries of Kansas City, Mo., and Terra Resources of Tulsa, Okla., have agreed in principle to a merger in an exchange of stock valued at $12.4 million.

Farmland, the nation's largest food cooperative jobber, would be he surviving corporation. Under the terms of the proposed transaction, Farmland would buy the 400,000 outstanding shares of Terra at $31 a share.

Terra, an oil and gas producer, went public in 1973. The transaction represents a merger back into its parent company. Terra's net income for the first nine months of the 19976 fiscal year ended May 31 was $6.9 million, or $2.07 a share, on sales of $39 million.

Sabine Urges Rejection Of Hamilton's Proposal

Directors of the Sabine Royalty Corporation said yesterday that the proposed tender offer made by the Hamilton Brothers Corporation for 1.5 million shares of Sabine stock at $60 a share was inadequate. The directors added that they would recommend that Sabine shareholders reject the offer.

In another development, Sabine said a unit of the Texas Utilities Company terminated a preliminary agreement with the Thercol Energy Company, a joint venture of Sabine and Santa Fe Industries, providing for the development and mining of coal properties in New Mexico.

Sabine declined to disclose the reason for the termination, but it said negotiation were continuing on a basis substantially the same as set forth in the terminated agreemente.

Record World Wheat Output Seen

LONDON, Sept. 24 (UPI)—Total world wheat production in 1976 is likely to be a record 391 million tons, the International Wheat Council said today. The Council said this would be 6 percent above the previous record of 367.9 million tons in 1973. It said record crops were expected in both the United States and Canada

France Sharply Increases Prices Of Fuel to Save on Imports of Oil

group, but France, while associating with the aims and maintaining informal contacts, has refused to join the agency, which, France maintains, is a vehicle for confrontation with the oil states' cartel, the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

Yet, in price policies and other measures to conserve oil and develop alternatives, France's record is probably as good as any of the charter members.

"A barrel [of oil] saved is as useful as a barrel produced—better in many respects," says a special agency report on conservation, which is critical of its founding member because the United States is not using price policies to discourage consumption.

"American prices and taxes must rise soon to reflect, at the very least, the real value of the energy if long-term conservation is to be taken seriously by industry and consumers," the agency says in its analysis of experience to date in the 19 countries.

In France, gasoline prices are controlled by the central authorities. Under the latest French economic stabilization plan, they will rise 15 percent.

Under a complex two-tiered system of production, price ceilings in the United States, oil and gas prices are controlled below world market prices.

There are grumbles by motorists in France, who are also faced now with higher automobile taxes, and protests from the Federation of Automobile Manufacturers, which sees automobile sales being hurt.

But the overall eraction could probably best be described as one of sullen resignation, as in the manner of this comment from one Paris car owner: "And do you realize what it will now cost me to fill the tank—100 francs [about $20]?"

Gasoline consumption here accounts for about one fifth of total oil use, compared with a proportion of one third in the United States, where more people have more cars and use them more.

While the French authorities are actively using prices as a consumption lever, they have moved in other areas to try to cut oil use.

Next weekend will end six months of daylight saving time in France which was the only country in Europe to change its clocks.

France's agency for energy economy has just reported that despite some inconvenience with international train and airline schedules, the nation saved the equivalent of 300,000 tons of oil, or some $25 million on imports.

And most Frenchmen now say they want the system repeated next year. "Our objective, says Sean Syrotan, director of the French energy-saving agency, "is to economize without reducing comfort."

New figures have been reported on France's energy consumption last year. These show consumption down 7.3 percent from the year before. But this mainly reflects lower industrial use and a mild winter.

This year, despite the experiment with the clocks, consumption has been rising sharply. The reason is the industrial gain. The Government electric power utility, for instance, predicts that its use of heavy fuel oil for power generation will rise by 13 percent.

The electricity complex is now, however, trying to turn more and more to thermal generation.

And despite protest movements here, the French are still moving ahead with their nuclear power program. Two weeks ago they announced plans to build a second uranium enrichment plant at a cost of $2 billion.

Triangle Aiming to Sell Or Liquidate Tube Unit

Triangle Industries Inc., Holmdel, N.J., said it would seek to sell its copper water tube subsidiary, the Triangle Pipe and Tube Company, and, if a buyer was not found, it would be liquidated.

Edward J. Simmons, president, added in a letter to stockholders that the business was unprofitable mainly because of what he alleged was a price squeeze enforced by the large integrated copper companies.

Triangle filed an antitrust suit against several major copper companies on the issue in 1970. The litigation is now in the pre-trial discovery stage with trial not expected until 1978.

The company said it expected to have a cumulative net loss of at least $3.55 million on the sale or liquidation of the water tube business, but that it would save $1.5 million in taxes and recapture $6.5 million to $7 million in cash flow by the move.

The Federal Maritime Administration announced approval of a $42.5 million Government-subsidized contract for two integrated tug-barge vessels. The vessels will be built for Coordinated Caribbean Transport Inc., a subsidiary of the Transway International Corporation.

The barge components, costing $28.7 million, will be built by a subsidiary of the Seatrain Shipbuilding Corporation, a unit of Seatrain Lines Inc. The tug components, costing $13.8 million, will be built by tht Marinette Marine Corporation. The Maritime Administration will pay for 38 percent of the contracts, or $16.2 million.

Montedison Catalysts Planned for Houston Unit

Montedison, the Italian chemical giant, announced through its Montedison U.S.A. subsidiary that it would introduce new advanced technology, mainly in high-yield catalysts, in the $90 million polypropylene plant it is preparing to build in Houston.

The new catalysts, developed in the company's research centers in Italy, were described as capable of a yield of more than 300,000 grams of polymer for each gram of titantium used in producing the plastic. This compares with a yield by catalysts generally used in the industry of 3,000 grams of polymer per gram of titanium, the company said.

Paine, Webber Gets Loan

Paine, Webber, Jackson & Curtis, the brokerage firm, said yesterday that it had borrowed $10 million from a "major American institutional lender" at an interest rate of 10⅝ percent. Wall Street sources identified the lender as the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States. The guaranteed senior subordinated ntes are due in 15 years, Paine, Webber said, with the funds to be used for working capital.

Amax's Iron Ore Output To Rise at Australia Site

Amax Inc. has announced the opening of the Mt. Newman Iron Ore Project's No. 2 ore-handling plant at Port Hedland, Australia, which it said would raise production and shipping capacity of the project from 35 million to 40 million long tons of iron ore a year. Amax has a 25 percent interest in the project through its subsidiary, the Amax Iron Ore Corporation.

Other principal participants are Pilbara Iron Ltd., a subsidiary of CSR Ltd., and the Dampier Mining Company Ltd., a subsidiary of the Broken Hill Proprietary Company, each of which holds a 30 percent interest.

have been selected by lot or pro rata by the Trustee for redemption on the 1st day of November, 1976 for Sinking Fund purposes only and that such Bonds or the respective portions of the principal amount thereof selected will therefore be redeemed on the 1st day of November, 1976, in lawful money of Canada, at the principal amount thereof, upon presentation and surrender of the said Bonds (accompanied, in the case of Bonds not registered as to both principal and interest, by the interest coupons appertaining thereto which mature after November 1, 1976), at the option of the holder, at any branch in Canada of The Royal Bank of Canada, or at the principal office of First National City Bank in the City of New York. The coupon maturing November 1, 1976 should be detached from the Bonds before presentation and should be cashed by the holder in the usual way. Interest on Bonds registered as to both principal and interest will be forwarded in the usual manner. In the case of any Bond of which part only of the principal amount thereof is hereby called for redemption, the holder thereof shall, upon presentation and surrender of such Bond, be entitled to receive (in addition to said monies payable to him by reason of such redemption), and the Trustee shall forthwith, without expense to such holder, certify and deliver to such holder one or more new First Mortgage Pipe Line Bonds 5¾% Convertible Series (Series D) due November 1, 1984, of the Company in aggregate principal amount equal to the unredeemed portion of the principal amount of the Bond so surrendered. Pursuant to agreements entered into with the Company, holders of certain Bonds shall receive payment by cheque issued by the Trustee and have been so advised to that effect.

Attention of holders of the above listed Bonds is drawn to the rights of conversion of the Bonds into shares of common stock of the Company which rights with respect to those Bonds or portions of Bonds called for Sinking Fund purposes must be exercised by October 22, 1976, being a date not later than the tenth day prior to the date fixed for redemption.

NOTICE IS ALSO HEREBY GIVEN that, in accordance with the terms of the said Supplemental Indenture, all interest on the Bonds so called for redemption or on the portion thereof to be redeemed shall cease from and after the said 1st day of November, 1976 and coupons for interest to accrue after such date upon said Bonds shall become and be void.

NOTICE IS ALSO HEREBY GIVEN that, in accordance with the terms of the said Supplemental Indenture, all rights of conversion of the Bonds so called for redemption or partial redemption shall cease from and after the 22nd day of October, 1976.

Judge in Hearst Sentencing

William Horsley Orrick

Special to The New York Times

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 24—Last ...me 21, the initials of 12 Federal judges ...om the Northern District of California ...ere put into envelopes and place in a ...allow filing cabinet tray for a drawing, ...eld to reassign the criminal cases of Chief Judge Oliver J. Carter who had died one week earlier. When the process was complete, Judge William H. Orrick had been chosen for the difficult task determining the punishment of per...aps the most celebrated convicted ...lon in recent memory, Patricia Hearst.

Man in the News

Judge Orrick had never seen Miss ...earst before she entered his court this ...orning. He had never heard her testify, ...or had he heard the dozens of wit...esses who testified in her long and ...omplicated bank robbery trial last ...ring.

But he does have a lot of information ...out Miss Hearst—the 4,582-page ...anscript of her trial, a number of pre...ial psychiatric reports; a four-month ...sychiatric study of Miss Hearst com...eted last month and the recommenda...ons of the United States Probation ...epartment.

In addition, people in and out of the ...gal profession who know him well ...ay that Judge Orrick brought to his ...ask the same intensity and seriousness ...at he brings to everything he be...omes involved in, whether it is the ...an Francisco Opera, of which he has ...een director and president, or his ...eekend tennis game.

'A Man of Vigor'

An energetic man, who at the age ...f 60 still hikes in the mountains and ...wims in the cold Pacific at his week...nd home north of San Francisco, ...udge Orrick has had a distinguished ...areer that has included service in the ...ennedy and Johnson Administrations ...n both the Justice and the State De...artments.

After working in earlier Democratic ...ampaigns, including the Presidential ...aces of Adlai E. Stevenson, Mr. Orrick ...cted as northern California co-chair...an of John F. Kennedy's 1960 cam...aign.

His work impressed the Kennedy ...eople—Robert F. Kennedy, his broth...r's national campaign manager, called ...r. Orrick "a man of vigor"—and ...hen the new Administration took of...ice, Mr. Orrick went to Washington ...s Assistant Attorney General in ...harge of the civil division.

Firm Founded by Father

It was the beginning of a turbulent ...eriod as Southern blacks pressed for ...qual rights, and the civil divison's role ...as crucial. Mr. Orrick was one of ...everal aides dispatched to Montgom...ry, Ala., after black "freedom riders" ...ere beaten by gangs of whites and ...rrested.

In 1962 he was appointed a Deputy ...nder Secretary of State, but returned ...o the Justice Department the following ...ear to head up the antitrust division. ...e remained there until leaving the Ad...ministration in 1965 to return to San Francisco to practice law as a partner in Orrick, Herrington, Rowley and Sutcliffe, the prestigious firm founded by his father.

Associated Press

Known for hard-working intensity

He has also taught at the Law School of the University of California at Berkeley, where he earned his law degree in 1941.

Mr. Orrick was still in private practice in August 1974 when President Nixon appointed him to the Federal bench under an arrangement that allows the two Democratic Senators from California to recommend one Democrat for every two Republicans named as Federal judges there.

"He has done yeoman service for the Democratic Party," said a man involved with the appointment who asked that his name not be used. "But he is a man of unimpeachable integrity and tremendous capability."

No one interviewed disagreed with that assessment. The judge was characterized by almost everyone as very strick in his courtroom demeanor, and "has been known to give attorneys a drubbing more than once," according to one lawyer.

'Somewhat Unsure of Himself'

"Yet he seems somewhat unsure of himself, somewhat uncomfortable in his role," the lawyer added, "as though only two years on the bench hasn't made him used to it yet."

A second generation Californian, William Horsley Orrick was born Oct. 10, 1915, in Oakland, where his grandfather started a successful paint company in 1868.

Judge Orrick attended private schools in California and Connecticut, and went to Yale University, where as an undergraduate in 1940-41 he was managing editor of The Yale Daily News.

He is married to Marion Naffziger, daughter of a brain surgeon in San Francisco. They have two daughters, aged 27 and 25, and a 23-year-old son who is studying law at Boston College.

PATRICIA HEARST GETS 7 YEARS IN ROBBERY

called Youthful Offender Act, available for anyone up to the age of 26, prescribes a maximum sentence of six years and, significantly, makes prisoners eligible for parole at any time.

It also specifies that no youth may be incarcerated longer than four years, with the remaining two years of the sentence to be spent on probation.

Judge Orrick turned these options aside because, he said, the main reason for granting young people such special treatment was to encourage them to seek rehabilitation. Miss Hearst, he said, has no apparent need of rehabilitation and the sentence was directed at punishing her and deterring others.

Court experts pointed out, however, that seven years for armed robbery is a more severe sentence than most defendants receive. Today's sentencing came one year and one week after Miss Hearst was arrested, with a gun in her pocketbook, in an apartment where she and other members of the self-styled Symbionese Liberation Army were hiding.

She went on trial in February, two years to the day after a small band of revolutionaries kidnapped her from her home in Berkeley, beginning a long and dramatic saga that included her conversion to the revolutionary ethic and a 19-month manhunt by the Federal authorities. She was charged in the holdup of a branch of the Hibernia Bank here on April 15, 1974.

After her conviction on all charges last spring, United States District Judge Oliver J. Carter tentatively sentenced her to the maximum 35 years in jail, a technicality necessary to send her to a Federal institution for six months of intensive psychiatric examination.

He needed this, he said, to determine a fair sentence. Upon Judge Carter's death this summer, Judge Orrick inherited the case.

The thrust of today's arguments before about 250 people crowded into the so-called ceremonial courtroom in the Federal Building here followed much the same lines as the trial last spring.

The defense essentially pictured the 90-pound defendant as a victim from beginning to end, someone plucked out of her environment, coerced into joining the S.L.A. and too terrified for 19 months to escape.

'Terrorized and Beaten'

A defense attorney, Albert Johnson, speaking, as he put it, of "my friend Pat Hearst," said she had been "terrorized, brutalized, pummeled and beaten."

"Your honor," he said, "she was humiliated and molested. She was vilified, tortured, and taunted. She has been punished, convicted and incarcerated. Your honor, she has had enough."

In recent months, the defense pointed out, she has cooperated fully with the Federal and state authorities in efforts, as Mr. Bailey put it, "to take some very vicious people out of society," namely, her former associates.

The United States Attorney, for his part, was far from strenuous in seeking a longer sentence for Miss Hearst.

He mentioned that she had cooperated with the authorities but said that, on the other hand, she "continues to refuse to acknowledge her guilt, and in fact, perceives that all of her troubles are the result of the actions of others."

Her case is important as a deterrent to others, he said, noting that it should be established that "rebellious young people who become revolutionaries, for whatever reason, and voluntarily commit criminal acts will be punished."

Judge Orrick, in handing down the sentence, said he did not regard Miss Hearst as "a future danger to society." He stressed, however, that hers had been a violent crime and said: "Parity, or equality, of justice must be respected. An appropriate term of imprisonment must be imposed as a deterrent to others and as a punishment for you. A lesser punishment deprecates the serious of your crime."

Concurrent Tems

He specifically sentenced her to seven years for armed robbery and two years for use of a firearm, but said the two terms would run concurrently. He ordered that she be given credit for the 371 days she has already spent in jail.

Within several days the Federal Bureau of Prisons will designate the institution where she will serve the sentence, but sources say it is likely that she will be returned temporarily to the Metropolitan Correctional Cente in San Diego.

Miss Hearst still faces avariety of felony charges in Los Angeles stemming from a shoot-out there, and is tentatively scheduled to go on trial in January. Two former associates, Emily and William Harris, were recently convicted—on the identical evidence that awaits her—of these charges and were sentenced to 11 years to life.

Throughout today's proceedings, Mr. and Mrs. Hearst appeared deeply distressed. Mrs. Hearst sat with her eyes closed and he rhead bending toward her husband's shoulder.

After court, her voice breaking, she said only, "She never had a break a'l the way, not in the press or in the court."

Afterward, her voice breaking, she said only, "She never had a break at all, not in the press or in the courts."

According to Mr. Bailey, Patricia Hearst herself was the only person who was neither surprised nor upset by the sentence.

"Patty," he said, "has expected the worst since I met her 52 weeks ago to this day."

Rap Brown Wins State Parole and a New U.S. Trial

By RONALD SMOTHERS

H. Rap Brown, who spectacularly entered public view in 1967 as a spokesman for a new black militancy and disappeared from sight in 1973 after being convicted of robbery and assault in New York City, won parole yesterday from Greenhaven Prison and is expected to begin that parole on Oct. 21.

Shortly after his parole was announced by the State Board of Parole, a United States Circuit Court of Appeals panel in New Orleans reversed Mr. Brown's conviction on Federal gun charges and ordered a new trial.

Without that decision, according to lawyers for the former chairman of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, Mr. Brown would have to move immediately from his parole from a state facility to begin serving a five-year term in a Fedral penitetiary.

Decision for Solicitor General

"I'm half between tears and cheers," said William M. Kunstler, who, along with Elizabeth Schneider of the Center for Constitutional Rights, has served as Mr. Brown's attorney thought the many legal bttles that could have brought the former activist 40 years in prison.

"It's my hope that after nine years of this he will not have to go through any more and the U.S. attorney in New Orleans doesn't press his case," said Mr. Künstler, guardedly suggesting that Mr. Brown might be a free man next month.

Gerald Gallinghouse, the United States Attorney for the Eastern District of New Orleans, said that his office had forwarded the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals panel to the United States Solicitor General, who would first have to determine whether it would be appealed. Until that decision was made, he said, his office would make no decision on whether to reprosecute Mr. Brown.

John G. Hamcock, th newly designated chairman of the State Board of Parole, said that he did not know whether the expectation that Mr. Brown would begin serving his Federal sentence had anything to do with the panel's decision to grant the parole. He said he had "no idea" whether the reversal of the Federal conviction, which the board learned of from newsmen, would mean any reconsideration of the parole.

News of both the parole decision and the order for a new trial on the Federal gun charges was given to Mr. Brown by telephone yesterday by Mr. Kunstler. At the time Mr. Brown was being visited by his wife, Lynn, who has come from her home in Atlanta regularly to visit him at the Dutchess County prison.

Mr. Brown was convicted in April 1973 and sentenced to five to 15 years for robbery, assault and possession of a weapon, but he was deemed eligible for parole because his imprisonment began in October 1971 shortly after the attempted robbery of the Red Carpet Lounge in Manhattan.

H. Rap Brown after he was sentenced in New Orleans in 1972.

A shootout with the police that interrupted the robbery led to the wounding of Mr. Brown and a policeman. The jury was deadlocked on the attempted murder charges stemming from the incident and acquitted Mr. Brown and three companions on that count.

Although prosecutors presented it as strictly a criminal case regardless of Mr. Brown's status as a national figure, the incident raised several questions: Friends and associates of Mr. Brown said they were unwilling to believe that he had been involved in what the prosecutors said was a simple robbery, and speculated that it might have had "political" or "revolutionary" significance.

In the four years after succeeding Stokely Carmichael as head of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, Mr. Brown had moved from being a symbol of a black militancy that was heir to the civil rights movement to being a fugitive on the Federal Bureau of Investigation's "10 most wanted list."

The legal problems of Mr. Brown, whose name is actually Hubert Geroid Brown, began in 1967 when he was charged with arson and inciting a riot after he spoke in racially tense Cambridge, Md. Before he could be brought to trial on those charges, which might have meant 20 years in prison, he flew to his home in Baton Rouge, La., with a rifle that he checked with the plane's pilot. He was arrested on Federal charges of carrying a weapon while under indictment for the felony in Maryland.

He was convicted on the Federal charges in 1968 but remained free on bail until April 1970 while he appealed the conviction and attempted to quash the Maryland charges. On the eve of the Maryland trial, two of his friends were killed when their car exploded near Bel Air, Md., site of the trial.

Blacks accused whites in the incident; Maryland officials suggested that the two had been carrying explosives and Mr. Brown disappeared, turning up a year later in the Manhattan robbery incident.

After his March 1973 conviction in New York, a Maryland judge sentenced him to one year to be served concurrently with his New York sentence, and dropped the arson charges after allegations that the local prosecutor had fabricated them to allow the Federal Bureau of Investigation to pursue Mr. Brown across state lines.

While Mr. Brown was in prison, Mr. Kunstler got a letter from a New Orleans attroney in April 1974 whose disclosure about comments made by the judge in the Federal case prior to its start led Mr. Kunstler to seek a new trial.

"That elderly white man is the basis of much of this," said Mr. Kunstler, referring to James W. Lake Jr., who subsequently testified that he had heard the Federal judge, Lansing L. Mitchell, say that he was going to make sure to "get that nigger," referring to Mr. Brown.

Mr. Kunstler also cited newly discovered F.B.I. documents on the Cointelpro program aimed at radicals here, which he said would prove that Federal authorities were out to "harass Mr. Brown and entrap him.

The Federal appeals court panel yesterday, in ordering the new trial on the Federal gun charges, ruled that the judge's comments "did not comport with the appearance of justice." The panel also admonished the judge hearing the new trial to examine F.B.I. counterintelligence documents confidentially to determine if Mr. Brown had been entrapped.

Mr. Kunstler said that the only charge Mr. Brown now faced was a bail-jumping charge stemming from the Maryland charges in 1967. Other than that, he said, "he's scot-free; it's a complete victory."

He said he would attempt to get Mr. Brown released on bond pending the deliberations on whether to mount a new trial on the Federal charges and while appealing the bail-jumping conviction.

Upon his scheduled release on Oct. 21, Mr. Brown faces a 10-year probationary period.

S.D.A. Asks a Study by State Of Chemical Bank's Stock Plan

The Securities Industry Association, leading spokesman for the brokerage business, asked the New York State banking department yesterday to investigate plans of the Chemical Bank to offer customers an opportunity to buy stock at discount commission rates.

Edward I. O'Brien, president, in a letter to John G. Heimann, banking superintendent, voiced "concern at the manner in which Chemical has implemented its new service" and maintained that "never before has a commercial bank held itself out a prepared to effect brokerage transactions on a broad scale to the general public at a profit." A spokesman for the department said he would have no comment until he has seen the letter.

Citibank Prime Cut; Fed Kept Its Policy At August Meeting

...outhwest Bank of St. Louis, which low...ed its prime several days before Morgan ...uaranty and First National of Chicago ...ade their moves.

Meanwhile, David M. Jones, a money ...arket economist for the Aubrey G. Lan...on Company, dealers in Government se...urities, said that he expected the prime ...ate to "remain stable at 6¾ percent in ...e weeks ahead."

He takes this view in light of the grow...g sentiment on Wall Street that the ...ed will not ease its credit policy further ...t this time, because of the $4.5 billion ...crease in the nation's basic money sup...ly for the latest reporting week. This ...uge increase, taking analysts by sur...rise, was announced late Thursday.

The Federal funds rate, the leading edge ...f all short-term interest rates, including ...e prime rate of banks, has held basical...y unchanged at a 5¼ percent target ...nce early July. A reduction to 5 percent —as some observers recently had antici...ated—would have put downward pres...ure on the entire spectrum of short-term ...terest rates.

Policy Unchanged at August Meeting

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24—The Federal ...eserve's Open Market Committee kept ...onetary policy essentially unchanged at ...s Aug. 27th meeting but narrowed the target range for the key rate on Federal funds, it was disclosed today.

An account of the meeting said that the members were all but unanimous that the basic Federal funds target rate should continue to be 5¼ percent. They were also agreed on the range of growth rates for the money supply, which was set at 4 to 8 percent for the narrowly defined money supply for the August-September period.

The difference of opinion came over the "band" for the Federal funds rate. At the previous month's meeting the committee had established a band of 4¾ percent to 5¾ percent, although one member, Paul A. Volcker, president of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, had urged a narrower band.

At the August meeting the Volcker viewpoint prevailed, and the committee narrowed the range to 5 to 5½ percent. The summary of the meeting said the majority "preferred to give more weight than usual to money market conditions...

Brokers and Clients Paying Less for Loans

Investors who buy on margin—that is borrow from their stockbroker—may soon discover that interest rates are coming down a bit.

Responding to a quarter-point drop in the call rate, the level paid when brokers borrow money on securities, interest on customer debit balances is also coming down a quarter point.

Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith said it cut the rate by a quarter point, to 6½ percent on debit balances above $35,000 and to levels as high as 7½ percent on debit balances under $10,000. Drexel Burnham & Company said it lowered its rate by a quarter point to between 7 and 8 percent. Bache Halsey Stuart said it would also cut its rates by a quarter point, effective Monday. Its effective level was unavailable.

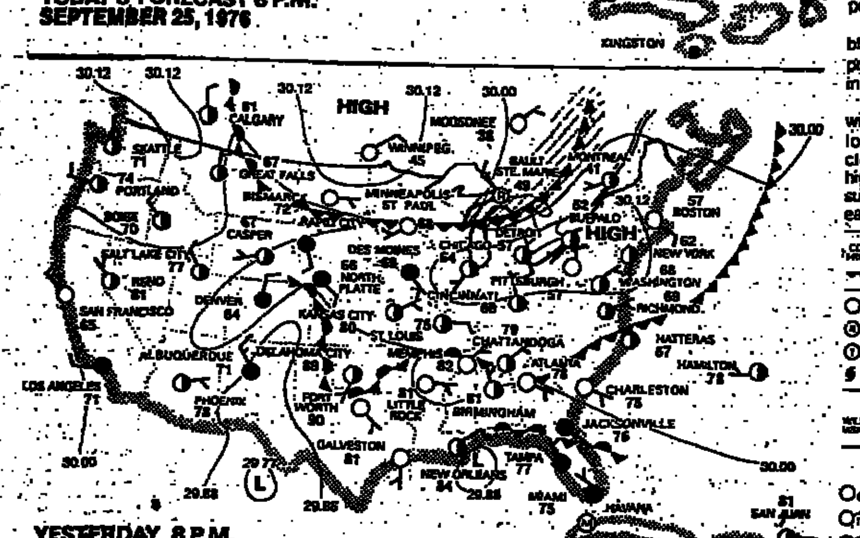
TODAY'S FORECAST 8 P.M.
SEPTEMBER 25, 1976



YESTERDAY 8 P.M.

Cold front: a boundary between cold air and warmer air, under which the colder air pushes like a wedge, usually south and east.

Warm front: a boundary between warm air and a retreating wedge of colder air over which the warm air is forced as it advances, usually north and east.

Occluded front: a line along which warm air was lifted by opposing wedges of cold air, often causing precipitation.

Shaded areas indicate precipitation.

Dashlines show forecast afternoon maximum temperatures.

Isobars are lines (solid black) of equal barometric pressure (in inches), forming air-flow patterns.

Winds are counterclockwise toward the center of low-pressure systems, clockwise outward from high-pressure areas. Pressure systems usually move east.

...nd-run cases, the sergeant said, ...ated as misdemeanors and carry ...onger penalty than one would ...r hitting a cat or scratching a ... in a parking lot."

In the last few days of August and the first week of September, the most recent period for which records are complete, there was at least one pedestrian fatality in every borough of the city. The details of these accidents describe a pattern confirmed by the statistics, which indicate that the vast majority of drivers who hit pedestrians are under 40 years of age and that most fatalities occur when people cross against the light or in the middle of the block.

"The cause of an accident is always a combination of factors, without any one of which the accident would not have happened," Sergeant Ghiorsi said. "But many pedestrians just assume that the operator of a car can see them and assume that he will stop. It's an assumption that they stake their lives on."

The driver, on the other hand, should not assume that a pedestrian can see an advancing car or hear a horn that is meant to serve as warning, the sergeant pointed out, because the person in the street may be visually impaired or hard of hearing. The elderly may also react more slowly to the imminence of danger.

Reaction Time Is a Factor

For drivers, Sergeant Ghiorsi said, studies suggest the average reaction time to be three-quarters of a second, which means that if a car is going 30 miles an hour (which is 45 feet a second), it has traveled 33 feet before even starting to slow down. Adding an approximate 43 feet for braking distance on dry pavement, the sergeant calculated that the average driver would have traveled 76 feet before stopping to avoid an accident, through no fault of his own.

"We always say, 'It can't happen to me,'" Sergeant Ghiorsi reflected. "But if you're careless and you're not hit, it's just because a car's not there. It's an accident that there are not more accidents when people fail to think about what they are doing."

Religious Rites Open The Jewish New Year

Jews gathered in synagogues throughout the metropolitan area at sundown yesterday to mark the observance of Rosh ha-Shanah, the Jewish New Year 5737.

Solemn religious services began the sacred 10-day period of Holy Days that reaches a climax with the observance of Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement, with its emphasis on soul-searching and fasting.

Sinatra and His Lawyer Ordered To Seek Nevada Gaming License

Nevada's strict watchdog of gambling operations, the state Gaming Commission, has ordered that Frank Sinatra and his attorney, Milton Rudin, apply for a gaming license, because they own 3.6 percent of the stock of the Del E. Webb Corporation, operator of four hotel-casinos in Nevada. Getting a gaming license requires intensive background investigations, as the commission seeks to curtail organized crime operations in the state. Mr. Sinatra once had interests in two hotel-casinos in Nevada, but in 1963 the commission revoked the entertainer's gaming license on grounds he was too close to Sam Giancana, the reputed Mafia figure who was murdered in his Chicago home last year.

After 24 years of marriage, Senator John G. Tower, the Texas Republican, and his wife have "by mutual agreement" moved toward divorce. Mrs. Tower's divorce petition was filed yesterday in Wichita Falls, Tex. It cited "discord and conflict of personalities" in the couple's marriage, which Mrs. Tower said had "died." The former Joza Lou Bullington and her husband have three daughters, Penelope, Marian and Jeanne. Mr. Tower, who will be 51 years old next week, entered the Senate in 1961 as the first Republican from his state to join that body since 1870. He is the ranking Republican on the Senate Banking Committee, and chairman of the Senate Republican Policy Committee.

Looking back on it, said Joseph G. Pearson, that was a grand party he financed with a $25,000 windfall. "I vacationed," said the disabled construction worker, who lives in St. Paul, Minn. "I bought clothes and things that my wife and daughter didn't have during hard times. I bought baseball tickets and football tickets. And I'd go into a bar and set it up for $50 or maybe $100."

But alas, all that money wasn't Mr. Pearson's. It was sent to him mistakenly, over an 18-month period, by the Minnesota education department, which is now asking him to return it. He says he fels "a moral obligation" to pay back the money, but has no idea how he can do it. The education department, which blamed the mixup on—what else these days?—a computer error, declined to bring criminal charges against Mr. Pearson because "there was no evidence the man intended to steal the money." The state accepted Mr. Pearson's explanation that he thought the checks he received were for disability pay.

John T. Downey, the former Central Intelligence Agency operative who spent 21 years as a prisoner in China, has passed the Connecticut bar examinations and may now join a law firm in Wallingford. A recent graduate of Harvard Law School, Mr. Downey was released by the Chinese in 1973. As supposed "Army civilian employees," he and Richard Fecteau, also released in 1973, were captured after their plane was shot down over China in 1952. The C. I. A. agents' cover story was maintained until their release by China.

Henry Miller, the American writer whose books used to have to be published in France because of their undeleted expletives, has now written a book in French. A 60-page monologue on a variety of subjects, including war, literature, and the past, the volume is entitled "I'm Not Stupider Than Anyone Else." Mr. Miller, is perhaps best known for the novel "Tropic of Cancer."

That man begging for money in front of Atlanta's City Hall these days isn't one of your common, ordinary mendicants. He's Mayor Maynard Jackson, one of many black elected officials in the nation who are raising money to help the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People meet a $1.6 million damage judgment due Monday in Port Gibson, Miss. "If this money is not collected, they could break the financial back of the N.A.A.C.P.," said Mr. Jackson. The N.A.A.C.P. lost a suit filed by white businessmen in Port Gibson, who sought damages for financial losses they suffered because of an N.A.A.C.P. boycott of their stores. The money being raised is to be used as a bond pending an appeal's outcome.

As just about everybody must know, Lillian Carter is a dedicated soap opera fan, but until now, she has steadfastly refused to say just which daytime serials she likes most. Well, Daytime TV magazine, which is, obviously, devoted to the misery-laden world of the soaps, has now revealed all about the mother of Jimmy Carter, the Democratic Presidential nominee, and her afternoon television-watching habits. Her favorites are "All My Children" and "As the World Turns," she told Daytime TV, in response to persistent questioning. Other celebrities who have "come out of the closet" and admitted a fondness for soaps, the magazine said, are Betty Ford, who's partial to "The Young and Restless;" Lady Bird Johnson, a "General Hospital" buff, and Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall, who is addicted to "Days of Our Lives."

Italian nobility is said to be agog over the marriage plans of Prince Vittorio Massimo, the millionaire scion of what is believed to be Rome's oldest, and one of its leading Roman Catholic families. The 61-year-old prince, whose lineage supposedly goes back to the Roman Consul Fabius Maximus, who fought against Hannibal, plans to become a Moslem and marry Josepha Soares, a 29-year-old model from Brazil. "We will marry at Rabat, Morocco, probably in October, at a Mosque," Prince Vittorio was quoted. "I am changing my religion and although I am head of the oldest family in Italy, I intend to become a Moslem."

In Beppu, Japan, Ralph Petrocino, a former New Yorker, got run over by a rhinoceros. The 24-year-old Mr. Petrocino was busily feeding the residents of a new wildlife park in the southern Japanese city Friday when he was struck from behind by a charging rhino, which bowled him over and lumbered off. Mr. Petrocino, a park ranger, suffered cuts on the back and side and will be spending a couple of weeks in the hospital.

$15 MILLION PAY CUT AGREED TO BY UNION

New York City Workers Are Now to Get Cost-of-Living Raise

By LEE DEMBART

The largest union of municipal employees yesterday fulfilled a promise to the city and agreed to $15 million in fringe and pay cuts, including a 10 percent salary reduction for new city workers.

The new reductions grow out of the agreement in principle reached last July 1 between all city unions and the city for a two-year contract under which the unions agreed to give back a total of $24 million as required by the city's budget.

So far, however, only the largest union, District Council 37 of the State, County and Municipal Employees, which represents 120,000 workers, has detailed where the cuts will be made. As a result, City Hall sources said yesterday, they will be the only workers to get the first cost-of-living payment mandated by the contract, to be paid next month.

"Victor Gotbaum [executive director of District Council 37] has made his people eligible for cost-of-living," a high city official said. "The other unions are coming along. But if they don't sign a contract, the city won't pay."

The Reductions Agreed To

The negotiations with District Council 37, which represents most nonuniformed employees, were conducted over the last several months and reached a climax Thursday night. Among the things the union agreed to were:

¶A reduction of 10 percent in the entrance rate for new employees, for a saving of $1.7 million a year.

¶A reduction in vacations for new employees, from four weeks the first year to three weeks, with four weeks of vacation to start after two years.

¶Premium pay for overtime only after an employee actually works 40 hours. If an employee is ill for two days and works overtime the other three days, he will not automatically get premium pay—for an estimated saving of $1.5 million.

¶A reduction in welfare-fund payments by $20 a worker a year, for a saving of $1.2 million.

¶Elimination of so-called summer hours for all employees who work outdoors. Last year the union agreed to relinquish summer hours for workers in air-conditioned offices. Workers in offices that are not air-conditioned will still be able to go home at 4 P.M. during the summer, but the additional saving is estimated at $1.3 million.

¶Agreement to accept a one-week lag in city payrolls. The use of the payroll money for the extra week is expected to net the city $2.3 million a year.

¶Employees in city institutions are to pay the full cost of their meals rather than half the cost, which they had paid until now.

In addition, the city agreed to allow District Council 37 to audit the health-insurance claims to support the union's contention that it could save $2 million a year if it ran the plan.

A City Hall official said that if the union were unable to show where 2 million could be saved, it had agreed to come up with an additional $2 million in cuts. On the other hand, he said, "If they can show that they can do it cheaper, we may turn it over to them, but there is no commitment to do so."

New York's Police Protest New Work Schedules

Hall officials as they responded to the P.B.A.'s allegation that the administration was, in effect, short-shrifting its membership by balking at wage increases. The officials said that if other city unions could make concessions, the P.B.A. could, too.

There were scattered reports—which the Police Department officially declined to confirm or deny—of slowdowns in responses to radio calls in some sectors and a suspension in the issuance of traffic-violation tickets in other areas.

But the mood of the pickets, as they marched in civilian clothes with placards and banners, seemed to be one of anger and bitterness. And as they demonstrated in the chilly hours before the morning shift began, and again during the warmer time before the afternoon schedule, the policemen's wrath was directed at Mayor Beame.

"He is a villain," Officer Joseph Papeo of the Midtown North Precinct said of the Mayor. "It's a disgrace that police officers have to picket, but there's no doubt in our minds that, for Beame, we're all second-class citizens."

Mr. Beame, however, insisted yesterday that the fault lay with the P.B.A. because of the union's refusal last year to agree to a one-year freeze on wages, as other city unions had done. And other City Hall officials reiterated the administration's position that it would not agree to a 6 percent deferred salary increase until the P.B.A. had dropped a suit to get the increase retroactively.

But representatives of the 18,000-member P.B.A., during a meeting with Mayor Beame and Michael J. Codd, the Police Commissioner, maintained that any agreement to drop their demands for a 6 percent retroactive pay raise would be unacceptable to them.

Their position thus appeared to create a virtual impasse yesterday in negotiations bewteen the P.B.A. and the city.

"They know we're ready to hand them the checks as soon as we get the agreement," Mayor Beame said at a news conference. He added that negotiations would continue through the weekend and that he was optimistic the situation would be resolved.

'We've Had Enough'

However, his optimism did not seem to be shared by many of the policemen who picketed the precinct houses yesterday.

"The city wants to bring the individual officer to his knees," said Officer Peter Cullen of the 20th Precinct on the Upper West Side. "I think we've had enough."

Other policemen talked grimly of possible walkouts if the issue was not settled soon.

And still others expressed displeasure over new work shifts, which, starting Oct. 3, are expected to cost every officer the loss of 10 off-duty days a year.

"Don't they know that we have families that need us?" asked Officer Walter Schwartz as he supervised the picketing in front of the 13th Precinct at 230 East 21st Street. "The divorce rate in the force is high enough as it is."

Signs Score Beame

Such sentiments were detailed on various placards that the policemen carried yesterday.

"Our families need us as much as the public needs us," one poster said.

Another read: "Overworked but not changed."

And visits to station houses in all five boroughs showed anti-Beame signs in abundance.

Codd Defends Picketing

At several locations, passers-by stopped and chatted with the demonstrators. At the Midtown North station, for example, Elaine Stellar, who identified herself as a community activist, marched with the policemen.

"The police must be supported strongly," she declared. Some officers thanked her.

The action by the policemen yesterday did not appear to disturb Commissioner Codd, who said at a news conference that to picket was an "American right."

But, like Mayor Beame, the Commissioner, too, was the target yesterday of criticism from picketing policemen.

"The Commissioner approves our work shifts—well, let him try out the shifts and see how long he lasts before dropping from exhaustion," said Officer Papeo of the Midtown North station.

Then the policeman walked across the street into the precinct house, along with his picketing colleagues. It was 4 P.M. and time for them to go to work.

3 Are Jailed in Aerospace Kickbacks

A Federal Judge, saying he was disturbed over the frequency of kickbacks in the conduct of business and the public indifference to them, sentenced three buyers for the Grumman Aerospace Corporation to jail terms and fines of $10,000 yesterday for accepting gifts from subcontractors.

"President Ford (as a Congressman) takes gifts from U. S. Steel, Grumman takes gifts from contractors, and anyone who comes before me will go to jail," Judge Jack B. Weinstein declared in Federal Court in Brooklyn.

The judge, who had sentenced 35 Grumman employees and subcontractors to jail terms and fines of more than $600,000 in 1974, said, "It beggars description and understanding to have people doing the same thing in the same form when I have been sentencing people to prison. It was in all the newspapers. And while I was doing that, the same thing was going on.

"I'm completely frustrated by the fact that I'm sending people to jail to deter others and no one is paying attention."

Not Considered Criminal

One of the three men sentenced yesterday, Ronald Hannington of 132 West 19th Street, Huntington Station, N.Y., a supervisor of buyers at Grumman, said he had not considered accepting gifts to be criminal.

"It's in the framework of the job," he said, "It came naturally, naturally. It's a product of the times . . ."

Mr. Hannington, who, Judge Weinstein said, had accepted $17,000 in cash and $3,000 in gifts between 1972 and 1975, was sentenced to two years in prison but was told he need serve only two months in custody. He also was fined $10,000.

Moments earlier, in sentencing a Grumman buyer, Donald Kenzie of 83 Ocean Avenue, Massepequa Park, L.I., to serve 45-days of a two-year term and to pay a $10,000 fine, Judge Weinstein had declared, "I can't understand Grumman. I don't know why Grumman is not being further investigated."

Jeffrey Kay, an assistant United States Attorney who represented the Government, said the investigation of the aerospace company in Bethpage, L.I., was continuing.

Company's Aid Cited

Later, Mr. Kay said that the Government would not have been able to investigate the kickbacks and obtain proof if the company itself had not come forward and aided in the investigation.

In a statement issued yesterday afternoon, Joseph G. Gavin, president of the Grumman Corporation, said:

"Grumman's continuing efforts uncovered the evidence that brought these cases to trail. In each instance, the company took the initiative to notify authorities, discharged the persons involved and cooperated fully in the investigation."

The third Grumman buyer sentenced yesterday was Jerome Buscemi of Central Avenue, Baldwin, L.I. Because of a family medical problem, Mr. Buscemi was given the choice of spending 30 days or 30 weekends in jail in addition to paying the $10,000 fine.

Republican Leader Is Indicted

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 24 (AP) — A Federal grand jury has indicted Theodore S.A. Rubino, chairman of the Chester County Republican Party, on an extortion charge, according to the United States Attorney's office. Mr. Rubino, 66 years old, was charged yesterday with extorting $6,400 from an architectural concern in connection with a renovation project at Memorial Hospital in West Chester.

The interview is to take place in Washington today by Mike Wallace, his fellow correspondent.

Mr. Schorr has been under suspension by CBS News since February, and the nature of his suspension is expected to be part of the interview. CBS News officials have indicated that a decision on Mr. Schorr's future status with the network will be made early next week.

'Naked Civil Servant' Wins the Prix Italia

"The Naked Civil Servant," one of the programs shown on WOR-TV this month when Britain's Thames Television occupied the channel for five nights, has won the Prix Italia international award for television drama. The competition, which has the participation of television systems in Western Europe and North America, is being held in Bologna, Italy, this week.

A 90-minute dramatized biography of a flamboyant British homosexual, "The Naked Civil Servant" was the unanimous selection of the Prix Italia jury Thursday night from a field of 21 dramatic entries.

Thames Television also won the Prix Italia documentary award with its film on Shire horses, entitled "Beauty, Bonnie, Daisy, Violet, Grace and Geoffrey Morton." The documentary played Sept. 11.

Consumer Safety Agency Warns Of Electric Weed Cutter Peril

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24 (UPI)—The Consumer Product Safety Commission said today that 73,000 electric weed cutters may have a defect that could cause a plastic part to fly off, hitting the user.

The device is called a Weed Eater Model No. 500 NEEDI, and is manufactured by Weed Eaters, Inc., of Houston.

Commissioner David Pittle said at a briefing that the company had submitted a plan, which the commission had approved, to correct the defect.

He said that the decives cut weeds with the aid of a whirling nylon cord and are billed as safe because they will not cut off fingers or toes.

The company, Mr. Pittle said, is notifying its customers of the defect through hardware stores where the devices are sold.

About New York

Humming Along With the Carter Machine

By FRANCIS X. CLINES

Gerald F. Doherty has been shuttling into New York from Boston every week wearing a "Don't Tread on Me" necktie, standing soul-deep in Kennedy connections and working very hard to win a state he does not know too well —New York—for a politician he does not know too well—Jimmy Carter.

Politics works that way, or at least Mr. Carter's Presidential campaign advisers hope it does. That is why they asked Mr. Doherty to serve as the coordinator, or chief executive-mechanic, of the Carter campaign in the state.

The last time Mr. Doherty spent any length of time in New York was more than 20 years ago, when he discovered through a football injury at Harvard that he had tuberculosis and had to recuperate somewhere—Saranac Lake for 22 months. He found New York so interesting back then that he concentrated on learning to read Russian as a sickbed project.

Now he is 48 years old and back in New York for real, which in Mr. Doherty's line of work means until Election Day.

The last time he was this close to New York politics was in 1968. He was two days short of arriving here to run the Robert F. Kennedy Presidential state campaign when the Senator was shot. As a Charlestown Catholic and an Edward M. Kennedy loyalist, Mr. Doherty has two credentials that, stereotypically, should leave him indifferent to Jimmy Carter. But he is in New York six days of every week, drinking tea and making contacts and trying to pick the brains of even casual political watchers on such subjects as abortion.

"Some people in Atlanta called me and asked whether I wanted to try this," Mr. Doherty related, "and I told them no go unless it was cleared first through Hugh Carey and Abe Beame. They'd have to be happy."

Well aware of chronic friction between the two Democrats, Mr. Doherty said the first thing he did on arrival was to place himself clear of it. "I told the Mayor I would call the Governor first and him second as the order of things and he understood completely," he said. "There's been no trouble."

As a former state party chairman in Massachusetts and a former state legislator, too, Mr. Doherty has a special perspective on the numerous New York politicians he has been meeting as they come forward to support a campaign now running up front in the polls.

"My basic message to them is that I personally think they're all terrific guys, fine people," he said. "I think that now I'll think that in November. However, I remind them there is a little guy with a green eye shade down in Atlanta watching the numbers. That's what counts."

It's the petty problems that seem to bother Mr. Doherty the most. "There was some fighting about campaign titles — one guy wanted to be called 'liaison' or something like that," he said. "I told him to produce and he could have whatever title he wanted."

And the several Carter visits to New York, helpful as they are in one sense, create what Mr. Doherty calls protocol problems, with all the ranking local politicians demanding a personal moment with the candidate, a picture opportunity, a touch on the elbow, something that singles them out in the eyes of their special constituencies. Attention must be paid to these politicians, Mr. Doherty knows well, but . . . He pauses over his tea.

"What if I said, 'All right, we'll get all half hundred of us together in our blue suits, and we'll walk side by side down the block to his door and knock together.'" He smiles at the thought. "We'd all go down the drain together."

Having fantasized enough, Mr. Doherty described some, but not all the things he was doing here, sounding like the main contender's "cut" man preparing his lotions and swabs for the championship boxing match. In the Carter headquarters at 730 Fifth Avenue, he has made plans for more office space to be used as "the boiler room."

This is the work space for a cadre of specialists on the subgroups of the electorate, and they will try to track moods, issues and vote readings to the point of cross references: What is the situation among blacks in Utica, for example.

"I will read all their reports and make the necessary phone calls," Mr. Doherty said.

He began this year working for the Shriver campaign, and when that faded and the Carter people called later in the year, he first checked with Senator Kennedy. "If Teddy had said no, I wouldn't be here," Mr. Doherty said. But for the while that he is in New York, such clearances end and he works for Mr. Carter, he added.

He works campaigns for nothing, following the early political advice of his father, who was a Boston fireman. "I figure once I'm paid I lose my effectiveness as an independent adviser," he said. "I've never been paid in the Kennedy campaigns."

And being an outsider in New York is similarly valuable in keeping clear of the numerous arcane feuds. "I'm not running for Pope or Governor and there's no way to use me," he explained. "But I'll be sending a note to Washington in November about who was helpful."

With his cynicism thick and gray as his hair, his lack of apology for failing to mention Mr. Carter but once by name in the course of an hour's conversation and his frequent references to the mythical man in the green eyeshade in Atlanta, Mr. Doherty was refreshingly issue-free, a master mechanic describing the joy of a machine's hum. But there must be something more personal about it all.

"Well if you cut away all my altruism" — he smiles — "my feelings about the party, my ego tripping, I would tell you I'm in business as a lawyer. Most of my business is in housing, and there simply isn't any being built lately. I can't afford four years of that." This was as partisan as Mr. Doherty got in explaining what he was doing in New York.

Even if few voters change their preferences because of the debate, the engagement may have had a more subtle effect in reinforcing and consolidating behind each candidate the supporters that he already had.

One measure of the success of the debates as political theater, at least in the minds of the electorate, will be the number of persons who watch the second installment, scheduled for Oct. 6; approximately 85 million persons saw at least part of last week's performance. Questioning next time will be limited to national defense and foreign affairs; the third debate, on Oct. 22, is open to all subjects.

There are reports that the staffs of the candidates are already exploring rules changes that might make the next session livelier. Agreement will not come easily; the risk for the candidates is huge.

One alteration, however, will doubtless be made: a standby procedure to avoid the audio loss that occurred last week. There was a pause of 27 minutes while the two men seeking the "bully pulpit" of the White House remained silent as technicians tried to find out why the sound had vanished from their lectern microphones. The problem turned out to be a 25-cent capacitor.

Smith, Against A Wall, Accepts Black Rule

Prime Minister Ian D. Smith of Rhodesia, facing growing economic and military pressure, has finally agreed in principle to dismantle his white supremacist regime as part of a plan for majority black rule in two years. He thus implicitly ended his own 11-year-old insurrection against Britain; but far more important, his decision—assuming it is brought to fruition—is of enormous importance to black Africa.

The Smith regime has been a detested symbol of the colonial past from which black Africa has, in the last two decades, become largely free.

There still are obstacles to a final settlement. The most serious question is whether Rhodesia's quarreling black nationalists, and the five black African presidents who support them, will agree to the terms Mr. Smith described in reluctantly accepting black rule. The next few weeks are considered crucial in maintaining the momentum of successful diplomacy.

But the fact of Mr. Smith's acceptance alone, and the real possibility that productive diplomacy will replace a growing guerrilla war, has already brought worldwide expressions of optimism. The settlement would also represent a major accomplishment for Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger. In two weeks of shuttle diplomacy, Mr. Kissinger appears to have successfully implemented a formula for solution first proposed by British Prime Minister James Callaghan.

What Mr. Smith said. The Rhodesian leader, in effect, accepted basic ideas put forth in the British-American plan to transfer power from whites to blacks while protecting the rights and property of the white minority. Mr. Smith proposed immediately to establish an interim government run by a Council of State that would be half black and half white, but headed by a white. There would also be a Council of Ministers with a black majority and headed by a black. The ministers would be responsible for day-to-day administration of the nation; the Council of State would oversee the drafting of a new constitution leading to elections two years hence.

The Western industrial countries would establish an international fund to reimburse whites who lose holdings if they leave Rhodesia or equity if they stay. The fund also would aid the country's overall economic development. Economic sanctions imposed by the United Nations would be dropped and the guerilla warfare would end.

The plan has been accepted with resignation by whites in Rhodesia, many of whom may leave, and with a muted joy and expressions of hopefulness by ordinary blacks there.

The black reaction. The black African leaders, are meeting this weekend and, presumably, will be deciding on their reaction to the Smith statement. Nothing official has yet been heard from the leaders of Rhodesian blacks.

During Mr. Kissinger's trip, the black presidents had reportedly accepted his proposals. But his discussions with all parties, including Mr. Smith, had been secret, and the Rhodesian Prime Minister, in accepting the plan, referred to aspects he could not make public. Thus it is not known whether the conditions outlined by Mr. Smith are the same as those agreed to by the black leaders or in serious conflict.

There are at least four specific points to which the blacks may object: (1) The proposed Council of State would require a two-thirds majority vote, thus giving each side a veto; the blacks have wanted outright majority rule in an interim government; (2) the constitution will be rewritten in Rhodesia; the blacks have wanted that to happen in Britain where British mediation might enhance forthright negotiations; (3) it is not clear from his statements so far that Mr. Smith has accepted the principle of one-man-one-vote, a basic demand of the blacks; (4) Mr. Smith expects the guerrillas to stop fighting as soon as the interim government is in place; the blacks have wanted a black-dominated Rhodesian government installed before halting the hostilities.

Behind those positions is a ferocious distrust by the blacks for Mr. Smith. They have negotiated with him before and each time he has ultimately rejected majority rule while, the blacks feel, they lost momentum in the fighting.

The guerrillas have been preparing a major offensive for the coming rainy season; they are reportedly reluctant to negotiate now and lose another military opportunity unless they are certain that Mr. Smith is serious about conceding power. Some of the nationalists may object to the idea of negotiating at all. The Government of Mozambique has continued to reject negotiations. In addition the Rhodesian blacks must now deal with their own disunity; they are badly splintered and will need a common front to negotiate.

The next steps. Contacts may begin this week between the Smith Government and black leaders to open talks about the interim Government. Each side is scheduled to choose its own representatives.

If the interim government is formed, Britain would be asked, under the Anglo-American plan, to enact enabling legislation for the transition to majority rule. Since Britain is recognized as the colonial authority for Rhodesia, that legislation would permit the United Nations Security Council to drop economic sanctions against Rhodesia and permit Western countries to form the proposed trust fund.

How it happened. Mr. Kissinger, who admittedly had neglected African affairs for years, became both alarmed and involved when the Soviet Union made inroads in Angola and Mozambique and showed signs of doing the same in Rhodesia.

His apparent success in Rhodesia is largely due to the timing of his diplomacy. Mr. Smith was being pinched economically and diplomatically by South Africa and militarily by the guerrillas; he was ripe for a deal. In the end, he conceded because South African Prime Minister John B. Vorster was threatening stronger economic measures that would bring down the Smith Government.

Mr. Vorster's objectives in cooperating with the black Africans against a neighboring white racist regime are plain: He wants to buy time for his own apartheid system and he wants to end South Africa's status as an international outcast.

His international status does seem to have improved, but his troubles at home are growing. Last week South African police arrested 400 youths who attacked white shoppers and shops in downtown Johannesburg—a first and ominous incursion by blacks into the center of a white South African city.

(Why there was a settlement: the pressure is on South Africa. Stories, Page 3.)

The Debates: A Marketplace In the Global Village

By JAMES M. NAUGHTON

WASHINGTON—Presidents sometimes rail at Congress, recriminate against critics or tongue-lash bureaucrats. From time to time they govern. But they hardly ever debate.

Thus it may have been just as well that, for all the breathlessness that preceded it, the first of the "great debates" between President Ford and Jimmy Carter hardly seemed to have decided their contest.

To hear the participants and pundits tell it, both won. Or neither did. One instant voter survey, on the morning-after front page of The Washington Post, gave a modest edge to the Republican President. Another, on the front page of The Washington Star, gave a slight advantage to the Democratic challenger. And a quick opinion sampling by The Associated Press suggested that neither candidate made an appreciable impact on the sizable segment of the national electorate that says it has yet to choose a favorite.

For that matter, the simultaneous appearance of opposing candidates on the stage of the Walnut Street Theater in Philadelphia and on four national television networks for 117 minutes—including 27 when there was less there than met the ear—was not a debate at all. It was, rather, a mutual news conference, valuable principally for its ability to multiply by millions the number of voters able, in the words of one Ford aide, "to examine the stock before it's auctioned."

"National elections have largely become nonpartisan media events," said Robert Teeter, the Ford campaign's opinion analyst. Patrick H. Caddell, Mr. Carter's survey expert, agreed that whether or not side-by-side television appearances were the best method to pick a President, they are going to be integral to the campaign.

The issues put before Mr. Ford and Mr. Carter Thursday night by a panel of reporters were substantive, dealing with such matters as joblessness, tax policy and the structure of the executive branch. But both sides considered such issues to be as transitory as the tiny islands of Quemoy and Matsu so prominent in the last national campaign debate, in 1960, and secondary to their fundamental purpose of projecting an image.

Neither nominee had ever been in a national campaign before, and each had emerged from relative obscurity to become a party standard bearer. "People really want to know about Jimmy, how he handles himself, how deep he is," Mr. Caddell said. And even though Mr. Ford has occupied the White House for two years, Mr. Teeter said he had detected a large "degree of uncertainty, a lack of knowledge of both candidates."

But at least as important to both nominees as the positions and criticisms they put forth was their manner in doing so. "Things are said between the lines," observed one of Mr. Carter's advisers, Joseph D. Duffey. "Character is what I think is finally displayed. It's either there or it isn't, and television is a great revealer." Michael Raoul-Duval, Mr. Ford's debate counselor, said similarly that "the debate became a centerpiece" of the President's strategy—not merely to discuss issues but to use them as a way to tell you about his character and ability and intelligence."

Mr. Ford, an accidental President with an exaggerated reputation for physical clumsiness, sought to display competence and self-assurance. His aides, aware that he is ill at ease looking into impersonal television equipment, made certain the cameras would be positioned so that Mr. Ford would seem to make eye-to-eye contact with television viewers while actually looking at his questioners.

Mr. Carter, attempting to get off the defensive for impolitic statements about sex and taxes made to interviewers recently, and needing to demonstrate an ability to make the leap from Georgia's statehouse to the White House, tried to project personal poise and a grasp of governmental detail. He cited statistics and fiscal data with regularity. He avoided referring to Mr. Ford as "Mr. President," and his associates made sure the stage trappings would lend no suggestion of incumbency to the Republican.

That there was no clear-cut victor from the first confrontation seemed, more than anything, a consequence of the caution of both men—each having become familiar with the way in which style rather than substance hurt Richard M. Nixon in the debates 16 years ago with John F. Kennedy.

"If you're going to debate you avoid foot-in-mouth risk-taking," James A. Baker 3d, the Ford campaign chairman, said. "You approach the debate in a very careful way."

Cautious Rivalry

The extent of the caution on both sides may have been reflected best in the willingness of both candidates to stand for 27 minutes, while television technicians sought to restore the audio system, without uttering a single word or witticism to one another. Neither knew when the audio might suddenly be restored and a bon mot be broadcast.

The awareness of risk was also evidenced by the advance expectations of the rival camps. "I do not expect it to be a win-lose situation, nor do I expect it to be devastating to Mr. Carter," Mr. Raoul-Duval said before the first encounter. "Both candidates are intelligent and both can score well," Mr. Caddell agreed beforehand.

Ironically, it was Marshall McLuhan, the guru of the electronic age, who seemed most offended by the tame character of the result.

He said he was bored and thought both nominees, standing behind their belt-high lecterns, looked like men waiting for their trousers to be pressed.

All the same, the encounter was staged, with the home television viewers uppermost in mind, as the ultimate "media event." Mr. Duffey, an engagingly philosophic sort, recalled having once led a group of students outdoors to watch a solar eclipse through smoked glass and darkened film. Tiring of the effort, one student finally said, "Aw, let's go watch it on television"—and everyone did. Remarking as much on the campaign debate as on the remembered eclipse, Mr. Duffey asked of the live and televised versions: "Which is the reality?"

The World

In Summary

Sweden Votes Socialists, Not Socialism, Out

After 44 years of Socialist rule that gave Sweden one of the world's more advanced welfare states, the voters have apparently decided that while they like what they have, they do not want increased state involvement in their lives. In an election last week, Prime Minister Olof Palme's Social Democratic Party was defeated. Thorbjorn Falldin, leader of the Center Party, will form a new Government from his own and two other non-Socialist parties.

The 480,000 voters between 18 and 20, who were voting for the first time, also apparently turned against the Palme Government because it planned to build 13 nuclear-power plants in the next decade. Mr. Falldin had made the potential dangers of the plants a major campaign plank.

The new regime has pledged to continue the welfare system but will reform and decentralize the bureaucracy whose "arrogance" had antagonized some in the electorate. There will also be a retreat from the trend toward state capitalism which the Palme Government had been following.

The opposition won votes by attacking a labor-sponsored profit-sharing plan that would give the workers effective control over major corporations within five or six years and over all business within 20 years. "This frightened people," said a Swedish editor. "We're well paid, we all have cars, we have country places. We don't want radical steps."

The last general election in 1973 resulted in a Parliamentary tie, 175 to 175, for the Social Democrats and the Center, Moderate (formerly Conservative) and Liberal Parties. But in the new Parliament, a change of one percent of the popular vote—or fewer than 67,000 of nearly 6 million ballots—will give the Social Democrats and their Communist allies 169 seats to 180 for the Falldin coalition.

In addition to the internal changes affecting the way Sweden is governed, the more conservative Mr. Falldin is likely to change the external policies followed by his predecessor.

Under Mr. Palme, Sweden has been a champion of developing nations and revolutionary movements. Mr. Palme's support for North Vietnam particularly antagonized Washington. Mending those ties to the West will be a prime concern for Mr. Falldin; his supporters want continued Swedish neutrality but also believe that the main military threat to that neutrality comes from the East.

Malta Stays Socialist

Maltese Prime Minister Dom Mintoff's Labor Party has been re-elected, winning 34 seats to the 31 won by the pro-Western Nationalist Party. The result seems certain to mean a continuance of Mr. Mintoff's policy of maintaining close relations with China and economic aid, while maintaining diplomatic neutrality for the strategic Mediterranean island.

Atom Slowdown Urged on Britain

A British royal commission on the environment has urged a slowdown in expanding Britain's nuclear energy program while more attention and money is diverted to improving safeguards and alternative energy sources. Coming soon after an antinuclear vote in Sweden, the commission's report may have serious repercussions throughout Europe, where heavy emphasis has been placed on the development of nuclear power as an alternative to oil.

The report may also provide influential support for antinuclear groups in the United States. Last June, by a 2-to-1 margin, California voters rejected curbs on nuclear development. Five other Western states and Ohio are to vote on the issue in November.

The British Government is not bound to follow the report's suggestions, but the prestige of the commission and its chairman, Sir Brian Flowers, an eminent nuclear physicist, is certain to affect public opinion.

The effect abroad is also likely to be heightened by Britain's pioneering role in nuclear power and its continuing expertise in nuclear technology, one of the few areas where the British are still world leaders.

Britain was the first country to build a reactor to produce electricity and it now has 11 operating atomic power plants. The United States has 61 operating plants, 73 under construction and 100 in planning stages.

None of the British plants has ever had a fatal accident but last week's report and the potential dangers it cited are expected to lead to a protracted debate on nuclear safety.

Risks raised in the report include possible terrorist attacks on nuclear installations, the possibility that exporting nuclear technology to unstable governments would help them obtain nuclear weapons, and that spending billions of dollars on nuclear plants would divert money from developing alternate and safer energy resources.

The "fast breeder" reactors on which nuclear development is now concentrated were singled out as especially risky compared with the present thermal plants. The fast breeders produce more plutonium than they use. According to the report this not only would magnify the potential for damage in case of accident but also would necessitate such stringent security measures that British civil liberties could be damaged. Therefore, said the commission, development of the fast breeders should be delayed as long as possible.

Church and State In Poland

Warsaw's Communist Government has turned to an unlikely ally, the Roman Catholic Church, to help calm the temper of the Polish people, angered by price rises, shortages and what they consider to be an official lack of response to their needs.

The church's positive response—a public appeal for support for the Government read in all churches—reflects the growing cooperation and mutual dependence of the two dominant and previously antagonistic pillars of the Polish nation.

Poland suffers from shortages of consumer goods, and there are long queues for such items as sugar, matches and meat. In part the shortages result from bad harvests and diversion of goods for export—Polish sausage is available in New York and not in Warsaw. But mainly the shortages have been caused by a 40 percent rise in real wages between 1971 and 1975 and a 1971 price freeze that sent more money chasing what was in many cases shrinking amounts of goods.

To try to remedy the imbalances in the economy, the Government last June announced increases that averaged 60 percent in food prices. Angry Poles responded with strikes, demonstrations, and, in some cases, riots, forcing the Government to delay the cost increases.

Most Poles expect the increases to be reimposed sooner or later, and the Government's enlistment of church support is apparently a preparatory action in that regard.

The unusual partnership that has developed between Government and the church is also evidenced in other small but significant ways, such as the sending of flowers by the Communist Party leader, Edward Gierek, to Stefan Cardinal Wyszynski on the cleric's 75th birthday.

Sarkis Takes Office in Beirut

Elias Sarkis, elected Lebanon's President last May, finally has been sworn into office and now becomes the central figure in efforts to end the [illegible] are against success.

Like the man he succeeds, Suleiman Franjieh, Mr. Sarkis is a Maronite

President Elias Sarkis of Lebanon.

Christian. But unlike Mr. Franjieh he has support among the Moslems who have been fighting the Christians. Perhaps more important, Mr. Sarkis has the support of Syrian President Hafez al-Assad, whose country has 15,000 troops in Lebanon.

No one expects the change in leaders to bring immediate peace. The divisions between the Christians and the leftist-Moslem-Palestinian alliance opposing them seem almost unbridgeable, and even as Mr. Sarkis was sworn in the fighting continued. At least 30,000 people have been killed and the country has been effectively partitioned into three separate entities, one held by Christians, one by Moslems and Palestinians and the third under Syrian control.

Beyond the demands of Lebanese Moslems for a greater share of political and economic power that triggered the original dispute, there remains the question of how to control the Palestinian guerrillas who have sided with the leftist Moslem faction.

The Christian leaders now believe that they have the upper hand in the war and openly profess they want to throw the Palestinians out of Lebanon. The Palestinians, however, already pushed out of Jordan and at odds with President Assad, have nowhere else to go. They, therefore, are likely to continue the battle.

By FLORA LEWIS

PARIS—Throughout Europe, especially in France, it is normal for many people to identify themselves by saying "I'm a man of the left," sometimes even with hand on heart. It is rare to find people who will volunteer that they are on the right.

Nonetheless, the traditional phrases have changed meaning over the decades. Just as the societies involved have changed in different ways and at different rates, so the words no longer mean the same in different countries. In fact, left and right in Western Europe are scarcely political places any longer, names of contrasting types of society. They are political directions, arrows pointing to the way things seem headed from the point where they happen to be at the moment.

For example, attitudes to nationalization and social welfare used to be considered arch-tests of the dividing line between left and right. Yet, in Sweden, where the Socialist Party has just been deposed by the voters after 44 years of unbroken rule, nobody wants more nationalization and everybody, left and right, favors social welfare.

In France, the left demands more nationalization while the Government, which the left calls the right, is preoccupied with improving social welfare. Italy, where the right has been in power for 30 years, has one of the highest rates of nationalized industry of the non-Communist world, and the argument of the left is for more efficient, more practical government.

The confusion is more apparent than real. It arises from trying to make comparisons and generalizations with labels, instead of the facts of political life. In France, Italy, Spain and until recently Portugal, Europe seems to be moving left. Not long ago, there was much talk of a "red tide."

Sweden, Germany, where Chancellor Helmut Schmidt is desperately fighting to hold a portion of a once comfortable majority, possibly Holland which has elections next spring, and even Britain, seem to be moving right.

The Ins and Outs

But in each of these countries, the outs have been gaining against the ins. Where the ins are Socialists of one tint or another and have already instituted large measures of reform, the outs are growing. They do not really argue against the established reforms, except to some extent in Britain, but they argue against the bureaucracy, the excessive cost, the inefficiencies which have piled up.

Where the ins are conservatives who have produced little basic social change, though they may have produced leaps in industrial modernization, the outs are also moving up. It is time, they argue, to modernize the social scene.

That is basically what Mr. Schmidt had in mind when, wearing his European hat before the domestic campaign grew tense, he lectured his Common Market partners on their internal affairs. It is no accident, he suggested, that France and Italy are the only members with big, important Communist parties, because they have done the least to bridge the old rift between left and right to consolidate what Disraeli called the "two nations" existing one on top of the other in a divided society.

France is virtually the only European country where the central issue is, as the government has put it, "a choice of society." The opposition Socialists have made an alliance with the Communists, and their joint platform is for radical change and an abrupt shift of power.

Italy's Communists, however, propose a "historic compromise" of left-right coalition, accepting that the people of the European West are no longer interested in mounting revolutionary barricades and want more functional, not more ideological, government.

But even in France, where the conflict is sharpest and the stakes therefore highest, perceptive analysts have come to the conclusion that the surface is an illusion.

"France is really a centrist country, but without a centrist party," observed James Chace, managing editor of Foreign Affairs quarterly, after talks with political leaders.

Though they tend to support the old parties of the left and the old slogans, the French workers have become increasingly middle class. Some of the French owners and managers, though perhaps rather less than in other countries, have come to consider labor a partner with a vital stake in their affairs, rather than an opponent. But accidents of history and political structure have made it difficult for the rigid French system to accommodate these changes.

Britain seems to be a special case, with a mixture of both tendencies, although Prime Minister James Callaghan is tugging the Labor Government back toward central ground in response to Tory gains in the electorate, after the years of former Prime Minister Harold Wilson's "pragmatic" legerdemain which paradoxically reinforced extremes on both left and right.

The growth of "Euro-Communism," the special brand of Western Marxism that is rewriting the Bolshevik heritage and turning away from Moscow, has helped blur the picture. It, too, represents a strengthening of the broad centralist reality beneath the surface of sharp political and class division. In this context, program and ideology tend to be more the decor than the actual content of European politics. An ardent French "man of the left," asked to define what that meant, replied: "It's simple. The left is for change. The right clings to privilege."

The leaders of modern Europe illustrate the movement—which could be called prudent progress rather than either to the left or right—better in their personalities than they do in most of the rhetoric. None of them is a giant, towering figure with flaming ideas.

Britain's Mr. Callaghan, France's Valéry Giscard d'Estang, Germany's Mr. Schmidt, Italy's Mario Andreotti, Belgium's Leo Tindemans, Holland's J. M. Den Uyl, Portugal's Mario Soares, and now Sweden's Thorbjorn Falldin, all are moderate men who pride themselves much more on being flexibly reasonable than on any loyalty to doctrine.

Their major opponents, where they are evident—Britain's Mrs. Margaret Thatcher, France's François Mitterrand, Germany's Helmut Kohl, Italy's Enrico Berlinguer—tend to sound more didactic. But the outs always have to preach more aggressively to justify their claim to replace the ins. Even then, all of them try to stress to their electorates that they are sensible people with solid ideas, not inspirational crusaders.

Politics now are essentially about a pleasant society, with a reasonable amount of social justice and equality, and a reasonable amount of individual freedom, choice and scope for energy; about a lively, buoyant economy and a concern for what too much helter-skelter growth does to cramped cities and the countryside around them; about concentration on domestic needs and a foreign policy which neither invites trouble nor ignores the dangers in the world.

The side offering what the majority of voters considers the most desirable mix may be to the left of the incumbents in some countries and to their right in others. But the underlying trends and aspirations are not very different.

The regime of President Park Chung Hee has frequently been criticized for its repressiveness, but outsiders generally do not appreciate the extent of the personal restrictions. Andrew H. Malcolm, a New York Times correspondent in the Far East describes some everyday occurrences:

"Country folk are stopped up to a half dozen times per journey to show their identification [cards]. Slum workers are tortured by police to admit their allegiance to Communism. Prayer meetings are broken up, or interrupted by agents photographing every worshipper. Families under suspicion are followed 24 hours a day. . . . Arabs Call Galilee Strike

Leaders of Israel's Arab citizens have scheduled a two-hour general strike in the Galilee Tuesday to underscore demands for the removal of Israel Hoenig, the Government's chief administrative official, who has proposed controversial measures to curb the growth in numbers and influence of Israeli Arabs.

Mr. Hoenig's ideas have been rejected by most Government officials, but he apparently reflects two sentiments held privately by many Israeli Jews: (1) that Arabs in the Galilee, with a greater birth rate than Jews, will gain a majority in the region in two years, and (2) that secessionist feelings among Arabs may lead to new demands for autonomy in the Arab-dominated region. The Galilee was largely excluded from the Jewish state in the 1947 partition plan under which Israel was created, but has since then been absorbed.

There are 450,000 Arab citizens and about 2.6 million Jews in the nation of 3.2 million, which also includes Christians and Druse citizens. The Arab population grows at a rate that is more than double that of the Jewish population. There is a large concentration of Arabs in the Galilee area, a region in northern Israel that is bounded by Lebanon on the north, Syria, the Sea of Galilee, and the Jordan River on the east, and the Plain of Jezreel on the south.

Tuesday's planned strike is of concern to the Government because a similar strike last March erupted into rioting in which six Arabs were killed.

U.N. Opening Is Calm This Time

For a variety of reasons, including the American Presidential election, the session of the United Nations General Assembly that opened last week is likely to be less rancorous than the last two.

The 1974 and 1975 sessions were angry ones, partly due to the success of the 1973-74 oil embargo and the sense of power it gave the developing countries. Anti-Israeli and anti-Western resolutions in the General Assembly in those years gave affront to the West, particularly the United States, whose representative spoke of the "tyranny of the majority."

In the last year, Arab unity has cracked, largely because of Lebanon. A new pragmatism seems to be emerging among the developing countries as their negotiators confront the practical and complex tasks of implementing their more extravagant demands. And the industrial countries are divided over how to respond to the developing nations. The most volatile issue, southern Africa, has been held in abeyance by diplomacy, including the travels of Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger.

President Ford apparently wants to encourage the calmer atmosphere. The United States forced a decision to postpone the politically sensitive subject of Vietnam's membership until after the Presidential election and the United States is staying in the background on other issues that might erupt in the General Assembly, including Cyprus, the Middle East, and proposals to stem international terrorism.

The Logic of Numbers and History in Southern Africa

Pressure Will Now Shift to Mr. Vorster

By JOHN F. BURNS

JOHANNESBURG—For a man who had been squeezed into a surrender by his only ally, Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith was remarkably restrained. "What happens here will inevitably affect the entire subcontinent," he said, in the only passage of his speech that could have been construed as an admonition to South Africa. It was a sentiment to which all involved in last week's negotiations on a plan to bring majority rule in Rhodesia within two years, including Prime Minister John B. Vorster of South Africa, could assent. Where they differed was in their intepretations of how black rule in the former British colony would affect the territory's immediate neighbors, notably South Africa.

Mr. Vorster's calculation in the exercise was clear. By pressuring Mr. Smith to accept the settlement terms laid down by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, the South African leader sought to promote the security of his own white minority regime. His premise was that South Africa had to choose between two unappealing alternatives: supporting white Rhodesians in a widening guerrilla war that offered the Soviet Union an opportunity to gain influence on the subcontinent, or obliging the white Rhodesians to settle with the black nationalists in a manner that increased the prospects for a moderate, pro-Western government. Mr. Vorster chose a settlement, believing that a shaky white government on his northern border was a greater liability than a moderate black one.

It was an undertaking fraught with moral and political ambiguities. Connie P. Mulder, Information Minister in the Vorster Government, told a party rally hours after Mr. Smith spoke that the South African leader deserved the Nobel Peace Prize. White South Africans generally were relieved that their army, already engaged in a guerrilla war in South-West Africa and standing by for use in the black strife at home, would not be drawn into Rhodesia. But critics of the government saw the settlement as a Munich or a Waterloo, depending on their political predilections.

On the right, Jaap Marais, deputy leader of the ultra-conservative Herstigte Nasionale Party, declared that Mr. Vorster was "a traitor to white Rhodesians" by forcing them to capitulate. On the left, there were salutes to Mr. Vorster's realism, coupled with a chorus of prognostications of what the change in Rhodesia would mean for racial relations at home. Said The Star, Johannesburg's leading newspaper: "Finding a settlement formula in Rhodesia will help to create an entirely new climate for peace in Southern Africa, and a multiracial government model which may ultimately have profound significance for us all in South Africa." Colin Eglin, leader of the Progressive Reform Party, put it more succinctly: "The days of exclusive white decision-making in Southern Africa are over," he said.

Mr. Mulder, for one, saw no such portents. He followed up his praise for the Prime Minister's role in the Rhodesian affair with one of the bluntest warnings yet to black demonstrators at home.

"It is necessary for blacks, and some of the whites, to realize that they can only push us so far," he said, in a passage in which he warned that the army would be called in if the wave of black unrest continues. The speech was only the latest indication that the Government, having completed its policy review, has no intention of sharing economic and political power. Tonic as it may be for Mr. Smith, majority rule is to remain a poison here. Hypocritical and unworkable though this may seem to Mr. Vorster's critics, it is a position the government here believes to be expedient and correct. The Prime Minister premised his diplomacy from the beginning on a distinction between the position of whites here and in Rhodesia. The Rhodesians were a colonial people, 19th-century settlers in a land already inhabited by blacks. They were outnumbered more than 20 to 1, and had, through Mr. Smith, committed themselves to eventual majority rule. White South Africans, Afrikaners at least, were Africa's "white tribe," settlers from Europe more than 300 years ago who pioneered in a barren, almost empty land. Outnumbered 5 to 1, they never promised majority rule. Instead, they offered blacks self-rule in the tribal 'homelands,' where their forefathers settled and where they could, if they chose, establish independent states.

The vision is one that is already under assault at home, and there are many besides progressive politicians and newspaper editors who see in the collapse of white supremacy in Rhodesia a new and irresistible force for change. Initially, at least, the force will not be military: Whites in Rhodesia, who will control the army and police during the transitional period, are not likely to tolerate Rhodesian soil being used for guerrilla operations against South Africa. But in the longer run, with black governments established in all the surrounding countries, including South-West Africa, it seems inevitable that the kind of guerrilla operations that seriously sapped Rhodesia's strength will be mounted against South Africa.

Mr. Vorster believes that his Rhodesian initiative will win him goodwill in black Africa, reviving his stalled "détente" drive, and will also help him in his relations with blacks at home. But the signs, already, are that he will be disappointed. Black African leaders have made no secret of the fact that Azania—South Africa—is next on their list of priorities after Rhodesia and South-West Africa. As the General Assembly of the United Nations met last week in New York, a similar intensification of concern was signaled in the speeches of the representatives of developing nations. In South Africa, black radicals, who took the collapse of Portuguese colonial power in Mozambique and Angola as a signal to step up their efforts, will scarcely be discouraged by a similar development in Rhodesia.

It would be foolhardy to predict that what happened in Salisbury could happen in Pretoria: 270,000 whites and an ill-equipped army of 12,000 men cannot usefully be compared with a population of 4.2 million and the strongest army and air force in Africa. But the combined effect of a costly and bloody guerrilla war, endemic violence in the black community, and a tightening of international pressures, possibly including sanctions, could yet force a dramatic shift in white political attitudes. The Government's hardening line on the township violence suggests that the shift could be to the right. But it is at least possible that it could go the other way, with Mr. Vorster, or his successor, one day showing that "realism" for which he and his ministers have privately lauded Mr. Smith.

...After Forcing a Decision on Smith

By JOHN DARNTON

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanzania—"What we're trying to find out is whether the conditions exist for the major actors to sit down together," said Tanzanian President Julius K. Nyerere last week, summing up the mission by United States Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger to still the guns in southern Africa. Like many others close to the situation in the subcontinent, Mr. Nyerere has begun using metaphors of the theater to describe the present situation —underlining the drama of it all perhaps, but also carrying the suggestion of an overlay of complicated plots, actions occurring offstage and a certain amount of role playing by principals whose motives may not be readily apparent.

Who are the main actors? What do they really want? And how far are they prepared to go to get it? The cast is as disparate as any playwright could assemble.

Rhodesia. There is no doubt that Prime Minister Ian D. Smith's regime, which seized independence 11 years ago rather than accede to British demands for majority rule, would have liked to perpetuate white supremacy forever. But conditions changed radically for Mr. Smith in the last six months: Guerrilla insurgency mounted, the emigration of whites stepped up and the economy suffered from military call-ups.

Some Rhodesian commanders are said to have informed Mr. Smith that the military situation, over the long run, is indefensible. Even more devestating, Rhodesia's sole support lifeline, South Africa, was prepared, Mr. Kissinger promised President Nyerere last week, to apply "a final squeeze" to bring Rhodesia to its knees.

All of these elements may have conspired to force Mr. Smith to negotiate a transfer of power. Until he finally got it last week, he had desperately wanted a meeting with the United States to present his credentials as an anti-Communist, internationalize the dispute and, some say, seek out a face-saving way of agreeing to the inevitable. At that meeting, he received an ultimatum: on the one hand, total abandonment, on the other, the Anglo-American plan for majority rule with a sweetener—financial guarantees for whites that would ameliorate their fears of losing pensions and farms. It was, in effect, an offer he couldn't refuse.

South Africa. The main concern of Prime Minister John B. Vorster's Government is to try to consolidate and protect the doctrine of apartheid within its own borders. Toward this end, it has pursued a dual strategy in recent years, physically isolating the blacks into separate homelands, called Bantustans, and working for détente with more moderate black African nations. Internationally, Pretoria is seeking help from the West by arguing that the Communists have designs on South Africa's strategic resources and control of the Cape of Good Hope sea route used for oil shipments.

Mr. Vorster was willing to sacrifice white rule in Rhodesia for several reasons: he feared a spillover of the conflict, he seeks respectability in the eyes of the West, he believes Rhodesia cannot be held without costly support from his own troops, and he would prefer a moderate black government to be installed there by negotiation instead of a militant one by armed struggle.

Over South-West Africa, the territory called Namibia, that South Africa has ruled since 1920, Pretoria would like to retain influence, if not outright control. In talks with Mr. Kissinger, Mr. Vorster, seeking a quid pro quo, has refused to separate the issues of Rhodesia and Namibia. However, the riots and killings in South Africa have undercut Mr. Vorster's bargaining position.

The Front Line Presidents. The presidents for four black nations in southern Africa have met perhaps a dozen times over the past year to plot the overthrow of white supremacy. Although they cover the political spectrum, from Bostwana's moderate Seretse Khama to Mozambique's revolutionary Samora Machel—they place a premium on presenting a united front to the outside world. "We see eye to eye," said President Nyerere, their chairman.

At their last meeting, they admitted President Agostinho Neto of Angola; contrary to expectations, he did not line up with President Machel, who argued against permitting the involvement of Mr. Kissinger. The presidents have supported the guerrilla wars in South-West Africa and Rhodesia. If they did not, both struggles would collapse overnight.

The Nationalists. The Rhodesian nationalist politicians are hopelessly split. The two main factions are the Zimbabwe African National Union and the Zimbabwe African People's Union (Zimbabwe is the black Rhodesians' name for Rhodesia). These two factions came together under the umbrella of the African National Council in an accord signed in Lusaka in December, 1974, which was formally abrogated only two weeks ago. The strongest figures to emerge from the recent conference here are Joshua Nkomo, the moderate head of the people's union, and Robert Mugabe, the secretary general of the national union, who has considerable support among the fighting cadres. Mr. Mugabe has been more militant, but both nationalist leaders preferred to get what they sought through negotiations.

The five front-line presidents have given up hope of uniting the factions, whose differences are grounded not in ideology but in personality disputes and tribal animosities. Instead, they sought, and finally got a government of "national unit."

In South-West Africa, the goal of the South-West Africa People's Organization, as stated by its president, Sam Nujoma, is "the liquidation of the legal administration and the seizure of power by SWAPO." Mr. Nujoma has said he would engage in talks with South Africa, if it is understood that the subject matter is "the modalities" of turning over power.

In South Africa itself, the two main black nationalist groups, the Pan Africanist Congress and the African Nationalist Congress, have opposed the Kissinger-Vorster negotiations out of concern for concessions that Mr. Vorster may extract. "We're struggling for majority rule too," complained Potlako Leballa, acting president of the Pan African Congress. Now that struggle is almost certain to intensify.

The Nation

Jobs Bills Give Ford Political Difficulty

Congress has posed a difficult political choice for President Ford by sending him two bills intended to create jobs. The President must either relax his opposition to using Federal funds to generate employment or risk a political charge of indifference to rising joblessness in the midst of the election campaign.

In the end, the President is expected to compromise by signing one of the bills, extending 260,000 jobs in state and local governments. Many of those governments have lobbied hard for the extension. Mr. Ford, however, is considered likely to allow the other bill providing funds for 300,000 public works construction jobs, to remain unsigned until Congress adjourns next week, thereby imposing a "pocket veto."

The unemployment rate has been increasing steadily in the last three months; in August it stood at 7.9 percent, meaning 7.5 million persons were seeking jobs and could not find them.

Inflation Rate Holds

The Consumer Price Index for the month of August has provided support for President Ford's contention, an important theme in his campaign, that the rate of inflation in the economy has been reduced to about 6 percent annually. For the third consecutive month, the index rose by five tenths of 1 percent, which amounts to an annual rate of 6 percent.

Two years ago, when Mr. Ford took office, inflation was about 12 percent. The President has predicted that his policy of moderate economic stimulus would halve that rate for 1976 and provide the basis for a stable recovery from the recession.

Schorr's Job Still Unsettled

Daniel Schorr's refusal to tell the House ethics committee where he got a classified intelligence report will go unpunished, but one further issue arising from his part in the report's publication remains unresolved: CBS News has not decided whether to reinstate him as a television correspondent.

The committee voted last week to take no action against Mr. Schorr because a majority of its members were unwilling to provoke a confrontation over the issue of freedom of the press.

Although the network supported Mr. Schorr's constitutional position, it has kept him on suspension since February, because, network officials said, he had allowed them to suspect that another CBS correspondent provided The Village Voice with the copy of the report that it printed. Mr. Schorr later acknowledged that he gave the report to the newspaper. The officials reportedly have been impressed by what they consider to be the favorable public reaction to Mr. Schorr's televised appearance before the committee, improving his chances of reinstatement.

Apart From The Debates...

President Ford and his running mate, Senator Robert J. Dole of Kansas, already burdened politically by the Watergate scandal, have now both been connected directly to matters currently under investigation by the Watergate Special Prosecutor.

The prosecutor, Charles H. Ruff, has reportedly subpoenaed from a union and a Republican committee in Michigan financial records that might concern Mr. Ford's Congressional campaigns. The prosecutor is also investigating illegal campaign contributions by the Gulf Oil Corporation, and it was reported recently that a former Gulf official had told a Watergate grand jury that he gave such a contribution in 1973 to an aide of Senator Dole.

Mr. Ford's Congressional past also embarrassed him in another way last week: the United States Steel Corporation, after a series of press reports, said that it gave Mr. Ford five free golfing vacations while he was a Representative and minority leader. The President said that his host, a company lobbyist, was a longtime personal friend.

The Democratic candidate, Jimmy Carter, suffered a different kind of embarrassment last week. An interview that he gave to Playboy Magazine, apparently to demonstrate his lack of condescension toward those with less fervent religious convictions, caused an uproar. The candidate used colloquialisms for sexual intercourse and said that he had "committed adultery in my heart many times." Mr. Carter also referred to lying and cheating by President Johnson and Nixon, a remark for which he later apologized to Mrs. Johnson.

There were primaries in three states last week, and the results were generally bad for officeholders or their protégés.

In Washington State, the Seattle Mayor, Wes Uhlman, was defeated in the Democratic gubernatorial primary by Dixy Lee Ray, a former chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission. In Rhode Island, Gov. Philip Noel lost the Senate Democratic primary to Richard P. Lorber, a political newcomer. In an Oklahoma race for the Democratic nomination for the seat of retiring House Speaker Carl Albert, Mr. Albert's administrative assistant for many years, Charles Ward, lost to Wes Watkins, a home builder.

West Coast Oil Rebellion

An expected surplus of oil on the West Coast of the United States has brought the Federal Government and the State of California into an economic and environmental dispute. It centers on what to do with the oil from the Alaska pipeline when production begins next year.

When Congress authorized construction of the 800-mile pipeline in 1973, it was assumed that much of the oil from Prudhoe Bay would be refined in the Los Angeles area. But it now appears likely that by 1980 that area will have an excess of as much as 800,000 barrels a day, due primarily to state conservation measures and production already under way at the Elk Hills Petroleum Reserve in California.

California contends that transferring the surplus oil from a relay terminal near Los Angeles to parts of the nation where shortages still exist would add hydrocarbons to the already dirty air in the southern part of the state. California has implied that it would refuse to permit tankers to unload the oil unless adequate regulations were guaranteed by the Government to protect the quality of air.

As a result, the Government has had to consider alternate—and more costly—shipping routes. The United States is considering, among other plans, bypassing California altogether and shipping the oil through the Panama Canal or around Cape Horn, for refining on the Gulf Coast and in the Middle West. Either of these routes would probably increase the cost from $1.82 a barrel to $2.65.

Patty Hearst Is Sentenced

Even the prosecution was surprised at the severity of the sentence imposed on Patricia Hearst last week. Miss Hearst, who was kidnapped in 1974 but who later joined forces with her revolutionary abductors, was sentenced to seven years in prison on combined charges of bank robbery and the use of a firearm to commit a felony.

Both defense lawyers and prosecutors had expected that Miss Hearst would be accorded youthful offender status under California law. That law provides a maximum sentence of six years for prisoners under the age of 26, and also permits immediate parole. Defense lawyers had asked for immediate parole in an emotional plea to the court that emphasized Miss Hearst's battered state of mind after being kidnapped.

But Judge William H. Orrick said that the youthful offender law was designed to encourage youths to seek rehabilitation and that Miss Hearst was not in need of rehabilitation, but should instead be punished as a deterrent to others. He did, however, grant her credit for the 371 days she has already spent in prison. She will be eligible for parole in 16 months.

Audible Remarks In the Senate

Vice President Rockefeller and Speaker of the House Carl Albert have been caught in some behind-the-scenes sniping at one of their Congressional colleagues, Senator Edward W. Brooke.

The two men were chatting while awaiting the arrival of the President of Liberia, Dr. William R. Tolbert Jr., who was to address a joint session. Unbeknownst to them, the conversation was being picked up on an open microphone on the Speaker's dais.

The drift of the remarks was about the class system among Liberian blacks. Then Mr. Rockefeller said, "Ed Brooke is a one-man receiving committee," and Mr. Albert said, "Yeah, he'd be a slave if he were over there."

The comments were probably little more than in-jokes in questionable taste. Mr. Brooke is the only black Senator. He is considered somewhat of a political outsider, apparently on the basis of his less-than-dynamic work habits. The remarks about Liberian classism were unfortunate both in view of the friendly speech by Dr. Tolbert, the first Liberian president ever to address Congress, and this country's newly formed pro-black African policy.

According to Senator Brooke, both Mr. Rockefeller and Mr. Albert subsequently apologized to him.

His Inquiries Could Affect the Presidential Race

A Watergate Prosecutor Is Still Hard at Work

By NICHOLAS M. HORROCK

WASHINGTON—The once-powerful Watergate special prosecutor's office is now a handful of caretaker lawyers tucked away in a shabby set of offices that used to house part of the Federal Bureau of Investigation's intelligence division. It was sent there to await its bureaucratic extinction next January and to handle left-over appeals of earlier cases or shards of investigations. Nobody really expected to hear from the prosecutor or his staff again.

But in the last 45 days, Charles Ruff, the present Watergate prosecutor, has quietly become a significant factor in the Presidential race between Gerald R. Ford and Jimmy Carter. The new attention to Mr. Ruff comes not from anything he has said—he has made only one public statement that could bear on the election at all—but on what the press has learned about his activities.

On September 6, The New York Times reported that Claude C. Wild Jr., formerly the Gulf Oil Corporation's chief Washington lobbyist, had told a Watergate grand jury earlier this year that he gave Senator Robert J. Dole, Mr. Ford's running mate, an illegal $5,000 corporate contribution in 1973 through one of Mr. Dole's aides.

Last week, The Wall Street Journal discovered that Mr. Ruff had subpoenaed the records of two election committees in President Ford's home county in Michigan and the political contribution files of the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association, one of several maritime unions that backed Mr. Ford when he was in Congress.

Mr. Ruff, a quiet former college law professor, has refused to say whether he is investigating Mr. Ford, the union, Mr. Dole or the Republican committees in Kent County, Mich. His only public statement has been that when Mr. Ford chose Mr. Dole as his running mate, nobody from the White House checked with him about Mr. Dole's possible involvement in the Gulf investigation.

Mr. Ruff has maintained, as did his predecessors, Archibald Cox, Leon Jaworski and Henry Ruth, that it is improper for a prosecutor to comment on an ongoing investigation. But in this case there are unusual pressures involved, for in five weeks the voters are to choose between the Ford-Dole and Carter-Mondale tickets. If any of the principals is the target of an active criminal investigation the voter presumably has a right to know. And if none of them is a target, the voter should certainly know that, too.

Mr. Ruff's most active investigation, according to knowledgeable sources, is into the Gulf Oil Corporation's $4 million domestic political slush fund. There is fragile jurisdiction, since Congress has reduced the statute of limitations on campaign financing investigations to three years.

That means that if Mr. Ruff and his colleagues find campaign violations in early 1973 or before, the statute has already run out. The other recourse for prosecutors is to find corollary crime—perjury before a grand jury or other official body or a continuing conspiracy to violate the law.

The central figure of the Gulf investigation is Mr. Wild, a portly former vice president who dispensed Gulf's goodies for 13 years. Mr. Wild told a Federal grand jury last January that among the recipients of cash in 1973 was Senator Dole, who he said received $5,000 through a long-time aide named William A. Kats. Mr. Dole has said he never received Gulf money and Mr. Kats has said he does not remember such a contribution.

Although Mr. Wild and Gulf were by no means the only persons in Washington dispensing under-the-table cash to politicians here and abroad (the Securities and Exchange Commission has looked into such practices by some 200 corporations), Mr. Wild's activities are instructive about how business was done pre-Watergate in Washington.

Testimony in connection with Mr. Wild's case (he was acquitted of a 1972 violation but had pleaded guilty earlier to a charge of making an illegal political contribution) showed he often fed money to political figures through their aides or close associates. The illegal contributions were in cash and delivered in plain, unmarked envelopes by either Mr. Wild or his own associates.

Most of the recipients in the Senate and the House have told the prosecutors that they did not know the money they received from Mr. Wild was actually Gulf Oil's and therefore illegal. Mr. Wild was asked in the grand jury whether he told the recipients the source of the money.

"I am sure they knew that they were not my funds," he testified. "They knew generally what people in my position make around Washington and they would know that somebody like myself just can't go giving $5,000 here, there and yonder."

The use of middlemen, of trusted aides-de-camp of cash instead of checks are all techniques that give the political figure who gets the money "deniability"—he can say he knows nothing about the matter when, many would argue, he should know a about it.

This insulation has protected many of the politic figures in campaign financing cases from prosecution.

Congress itself has not been anxious to investiga its own members on allegations of political financi manipulations. It has been established, for instan that Senator Hugh Scott received $100,000 over 10-year period from Gulf Oil, but a Senate Eth committee ended an inquiry earlier this month wi out taking action.

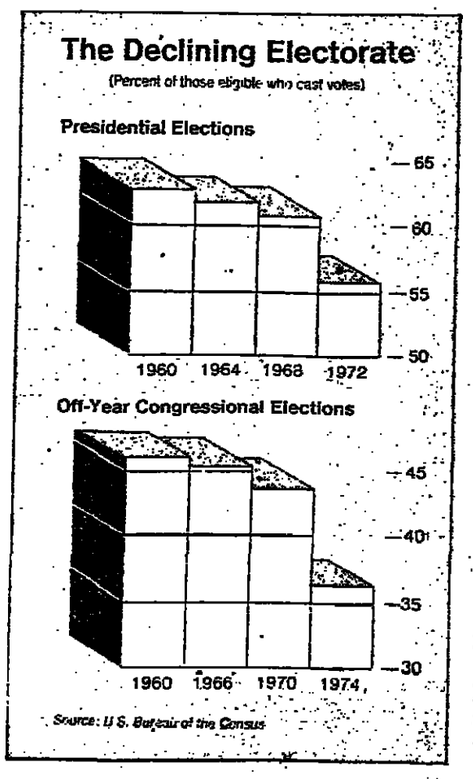
Voter Turnout Has Been Declining Steadily Since 1960

Just Half an Electorate May Vote Nov. 2

By ROBERT REINHOLD

WASHINGTON—It is estimated that 85 million people witnessed the great debate between Gerald Ford and Jimmy Carter on television last Thursday night. But by November 2, by many an informed and alarmed estimate, scarcely half the 147 million Americans old enough to vote will go to the polling booth to make a choice.

If recent voting trends persist, this year's turnout may plummet to the lowest percentage of the electorate in a century and a half. Prof. Walter Dean Burnham, a political scientist at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology who has made a career of studying voting behavior, is taking bets from all comers that the turnout will not exceed 50 percent, and in fact thinks it will be less. If he is correct, the voting rate would be the smallest sine the American party system solidified in the Presidential election of 1828.



And if, in the words of the late political scholar V. O. Key Jr. of Harvard, "Elections are basic means by which the people of a democracy bend government to their wishes," then the people of the oldest democracy in the world may be in danger of letting a precious power slip from their fingers into the hands of a relative few.

The facts are clear and startling. American voting participation, never very high compared with other democracies, has been declining steadily since 1960. In that year, 64 percent of the eligible voters turned out to give a razor-thin edge to John Kennedy over Richard Nixon. Since then—even though literacy tests, poll taxes and many other impediments have been swept away, and despite vigorous registration drives—voting has continued to slip, dropping to 55 percent in the last Presidential election, the lowest since the roaring and complacent twenties. The decline also coincides with the increase of mass exposure, through television, to the political process, but no one seems to know what effect that has had on turnout.

No such falling-off has occurred in other Western democracies. In the Swedish election last week, for example, the turnout was over 90 percent and the outcome has changed the thrust of Swedish society. (Voters there are automatically registered.)

In this country, turnout has fluctuated widely through history. It reached a high point during the late 1800's, when the rates exceeded 80 percent in Presidential years. But that figure is deceptive. The eligible electorate was all male and nearly all white. Voting was primitive, often by voice or colored beads, or on ballots printed by the parties. The opportunities for fraud were obvious and often seized.

By the turn of the century nearly all states had converted to uniform printed ballots and imposed rules of eligibility. While such reforms may have reduced fraud, they also made many persons ineligible to vote. A printed ballot, for one thing, demanded ability to read.

But what is to account for the recent slump? The "alienation" theory holds that, after Vietnam and years of Watergate scandal and other political rot, the electorate is turned off, cynical, distrustful of government, uncertain that their votes make much difference. Support for this theory came recently from the bipartisan Committee for the Study of the American electorate.

The committee, in a survey of nonvoters by Peter D. Hart Research Associates, linked nonparticipatio directly to feelings of alienation and said that eve many well-informed were not voting. A major fla in the study, however, was that it had no control that is, similar questions were not asked of peopl who did vote to see if the nonvoters really harbore different attitudes.

Despite this flaw, Professor Burnham agrees wit the disenchantment theory, and believes it is ver likely to depress this year's vote.

Choice, Not Turnout

But many other scholars disagree vigorously "Badly overblown," says Warren Miller of the Cente for Political Studies at the University of Michigar in reference to the alienation theory. There is n doubt that distrust and cynicism have risen in th last decade, he said, but studies at Michigan hav not found it related to turnout. "It has had impac on choice, not turnout," he said.

Another factor may be the changing nature o the electorate. Donald E. Stokes of Princeton liken it to a "residential hotel," with people moving i and out. The newest guests are the young. The lower ing of the voting age to 18 brought 20 million ne voters into the 1972 election. The young and firs time voters almost always turn out at much lowe rates than average.

What to do? Some have suggested making votin compulsory, as it is in Australia (nonvoters witho a good excuse pay a small fine) and was until recen ly in the Netherlands. Voting is a democratic dut this argument goes, not just a right, and peopl should be compelled to make a choice. Others argu that nonvoting is really a good sign, a sign of natio al contentment. It would be a mistake, they sa to add millions of uninformed, ill-educated and uni terested voters who might vote irresponsibly f demagogic or authoritarian candidates.

It seems unlikely that compulsory voting wou be acceptable in this individualistic country. So mar experts of both liberal and conservative persuasio seem to be seeking a solution in the middle, o that would bring back those who—whether fro disaffection or difficulty in registering or gettin to vote—really should be part of the system, leavin out the truly uninterested and politically ine Proponents of such an effort would be happy wi a turnout of 60 to 80 percent.

"Beyond that," said Kevin P. Phillips, he conserv tive political analyst, "you get people susceptib to emotion and demagoguery. That loss is no loss."

nbitious way Plan

illion plan for the develop- e New York region's Gate- al Recreation Area over the urs, disclosed last week by l Park Service, would in- jor departure from the tra- proach to such urban parks. for the park, which was 1974, depends on Congressional funding. About $93 million has been authorized, but has yet to be appropriated. Park Service officials, however, believe the funds will be forthcoming. Both the New York and New Jersey Congressional delegations have been actively promoting the development.

The plan includes subsidized transportation to the park for the poor, the handicapped and the elderly; development of "villages" consisting of recreational, educational and social facilities, and gardens for inner city residents to grow their own vegetables and flowers. The program also would rehabilitate beaches and historic buildings.

The Gateway park consists of Breezy Point in Brooklyn, Jamaica Bay in Queens, the Great Kills shoreline on Staten Island, and Sandy Hook in New Jersey.

Rohatyn's Plan On Austerity

Felix G. Rohatyn, the chairman of the New York State Municipal Assistance Corporation, has suggested an idea for getting New York City through the third year of its fiscal austerity program. He believes his plan would allow the city to balance its budget by mid-1978, as required, without the unduly harsh cutbacks that now seem necessary.

Mr. Rohatyn's intention, as he described the idea last week, seemed as much to encourage serious consideration now of the city's third-year difficulties as to win favor for the plan.

The city must erase a $500 million budget deficit in fiscal '78. Among the ways to accomplish this are to cut back more on municipal services, to lay people off and to reduce debt service. Further cutbacks are inevitable. The question is how to cut so as to help right the city's economy and do least damage to services, workers and residents.

Many people have called for reduction of city debt service, now about 17 percent of the budget, which the city is constitutionally required to meet. Mr. Rohatyn's plan would have the effect of stretching out payment on more than $10 billion in long-term city and corporation bonds. To do this, new corporation bonds, which would be federally guaranteed, would be issued and the proceeds used to pay off the old outstanding bonds. But the new bonds would be paid off in 20 to 25 years, instead of in 5 to 10 years, as required now. Thus the "stretch-out" would have no effect on current bondholders; they would be paid on time. And the new buyers would simply be purchasing longer-term bonds.

The main difficulty with the plan is thought to be the Federal guarantee aspect. Mr. Rohatyn and others have repeatedly asked for such guarantees without success. At the height of the city's fiscal crisis last year, Democrats and Republicans alike showed little enthusiasm for such Federal support, opting instead to give the city direct loans. Even if there is a Democratic administration next year, there is no assurance that Congress or the White House would approve Federal guarantees.

An Exam of City Schools

The State Board of Regents has ordered a study of New York City's public school system that will include a potentially touchy examination of decentralization, the first since the program went into effect in 1970.

The decision to make the study, which will look at the system's educational effectiveness and financial problems as well as administration, followed charges that the schools were failures because pupils were reading inadequately and attendance was poor. In 1976, only 42.6 percent of the city's pupils read at or above grade level. (Related story on reading scores appears elsewhere on this pake.) The percentage of dropouts from high school increased from 10.44 percent in 1967 o 13.20 percent in 1974.

Critics of decentralization believe it dilutes control over standards of quality. They also note financial abuses that have occurred in some districts. Defenders of locally run school systems maintain that central control is too unresponsive to community concerns and needs. There are now 32 decentralized districts in New York City, each being run by a locally elected school board that has jurisdiction over elementary and junior high schools in its area.

The effects on the school system of the city's money problems are already well documented. Teachers have been dismissed, courses dropped and class size substantially increased.

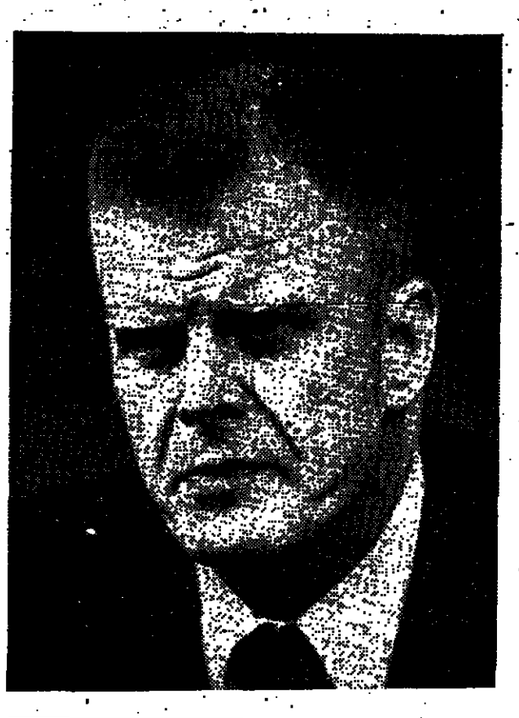
From Indictments to Landslides, He Has Overcome

Helstoski Has Made Survival The Heart of a Political Career



By ALVIN MAURER

Politics in New Jersey, rarely simple or polite, becomes particularly lively and unfathomable in the Ninth Congressional District, for this is the arena of Representative Henry Helstoski, a controversial and unorthodox individual who practices survival techniques with astonishing success. The six-term Congressman, despite a Federal extortion indictment and charges of voting fraud, came through again last week by decisively defeating Assemblyman Byron M. Baer in a rerun of their Democratic primary of last June.

Mr. Helstoski, the only one of the 60 House incumbents in the tristate area seeking re-election in November who is in legal trouble, will now be in his accustomed role of underdog against an attractive Republican opponent, Harold C. Hollenbeck. But a political obituary would be premature.

Mr. Helstoski has proved durable as a Democratic liberal is in legal trouble, will now be in his accustomed role of slides, redistricting, and charges of wife beating and franking-privilege abuse. He has withstood several persons close to him being indicted or convicted.

His political career began inauspiciously. Running as a Republican in 1951, he lost a race for the East Rutherford Town Council. He was still a Republican five years later when he won a Council seat, an independent when he was elected Mayor in 1957 and a Democrat when he was re-elected in 1959. After two more mayoral terms, he was ready for bigger things.

In 1964, he got the Democratic nomination and took on Representative Frank C. Osmers Jr., a nine-term incumbent. He won in the Johnson landslide, and in 1966 he again defeated Mr. Osmers.

In 1968, Mr. Helstoski was arrested and released on $100 bail after his second wife, Victoria, charged he had beaten her. She later withdrew the charges, but his troubles were not over. His district had been gerrymandered to give his opponent an even greater Republican majority. Mr. Helstoski won anyway.

It was a tough fight again in 1970, but back Mr. Helstoski came to defeat Henry L. Hoebel.

In 1972, a Federal judge upheld a complaint by Mr. Helstoski's opponent, Alfred D. Shlafo, that the Congressman had abused his franking privilege, though the ruling was overturned on appeal. There was also the Nixon landslide. Mr. Helstoski won again.

In 1974, there was no erosion in Mr. Helstoski's political home base and there was Watergate, so for a change, his seat was in little jeopardy.

Just before last June's primary, a two-year Federal investigation culminated in an indictment that charged Mr. Helstoski with having extorted more than $8,000 from Chilean aliens in return for legislation that would prevent their deportation, charges he has vigorously denied. But a former aide was convicted for extortion. An assistant is awaiting trial on obstruction-of-justice charges.

It was too much even for Mr. Helstoski. His spirits sagged, supporters wavered, finances dried up. He barely defeated Mr. Baer in their first primary contest, and when Mr. Baer alleged that 1,500 absentee ballots were fraudulent, (a charge still being investigated), Mr. Helstoski agreed to a new election.

His extortion trial was postponed until after the November election, and Mr. Helstoski revived. He staged a spectacular drive to win the rematch handily. For the moment, he has survived again. How does he do it?

His blond crew-cut, his Polish descent and his Catholicism appeal to the conservative-leaning blue-collar ethnics among the 250,000 voters in the district's three Hudson County and 33 Bergen County communities, and they provide the nucleus of his strength. At the same time, his very early opposition to the Vietnam war, his firm stand against such groups as the House Committee on Un-American Activities and his consistent support of social legislation have made him a favorite of liberals and labor. He is supported by Americans for Democratic Action.

He has compiled an enviable record of service to his constituents. Newsletters, questionnaires and countless Government publications pour into their homes. His accessibility to constituents is widely known.

He has a loyal cadre of followers and powerful organizational backing. He has put together an experienced staff in Washington and has earned a reputation as a hard-working Congressman. (On the debit side, he has demonstrated little leadership ability and initiates legislation infrequently.)

Mr. Hollenbeck, a lawyer and former state senator and assemblyman, is running hard. He feels his more moderate approach, especially on fiscal matters, will entice a broad spectrum of voters. But in an interview he made it obvious he was not overlooking Mr. Helstoski's talent for survival.

"Please," he said, "don't make me the favorite."

aticians are still in search of a simpler proof of the conjecture, one that will not lean so heavily on the computer but will be accessible to the techniques of more or less ordinary geometry.

There is some anxiety in mathematical circles that because the four-color conjecture has been broken at last, amateur mathematicians will now be encouraged to proceed with such projects as squaring the circle and trisecting the angle. Both, according to professionals, have been proven to be simply impossible.

Reading Scores Have Improved

The Federal program that monitors educational achievement has found that American schoolchildren are reading as well as and in some groups better than they were five years ago.

The report, issued by the National Assessment of Educational Progress in Denver, cautioned, however, that the results themselves should be read as neither completely positive nor completely negative. The reading ability of 9-year-olds, and particularly of black 9-year-olds, has significantly improved since 1971. But that of 13-year-olds and 17-year-olds has not, and, in an important subcategory of the test, the part dealing with the ability to analyze and draw inferences from what they read, it has declined.

The report was also cautious in presenting reasons for the change in scores. A panel evaluating the national tests speculated that 9-year-olds may be doing better now because there has in the last decade been increased emphasis on reading in primary grades. Other factors cited were the wider availability of kindergarten and Head Start and Title I programs for the disadvantaged. Those programs, and progress in school integration, the panel suggested, contributed to the improvement in the scores of black 9-year-olds. They scored 4.8 percent better than they did in 1971; whites scored 1.2 percent better.

Older black students, however, did not demonstrate the improvement that black 9-year-olds did. One reason, some experts have said, may be that the secondary level English curricula no longer generally emphasized reading and writing. That may also account for the 1 percent drop in inferential comprehension skills in all 13-year-olds and in all 17-year-olds.

Viking Finds Evidence of Ice

Pre-Viking speculation went like this: If life were to be found elsewhere in the solar system it would probably be found on Mars, because there was evidence suggesting that Mars was once abundant in water. Neither Viking lander has so far discovered more than the suggestion that there may be life, but Viking 2 has confirmed that there is water, and good deal more than had been expected.

What the Viking 2 spacecraft has discovered is that Mars's permanent northern polar cap is composed entirely of frozen water, and not frozen carbon dioxide, as many scientists had previously thought. Some scientists now suggest that the whole planet may be likened to a global iceberg formed around a rock core. In this theory, the polar cap is the tip and the rest of the water is in permafrost form submerged in a sea of dust and rock.

Two independent measurements led to the discovery. The first was that there was an unusally high amount of water vapor in the atmosphere over the pole. The second was that the average surface temperature of the icecap was 90 degrees below zero Fahrenheit. The vapor reading was compatible with Martian season (it is late summer in the north of Mars now), and the temperature reading incompatible with the carbon dioxide theory. On Mars, carbon dioxide freezes at 190 degrees below.

Project scientists declined to draw any biological implications from the new water findings, but they noted that water in some form or other is crucial to life as it is known on earth. The new evidence suggested that when Mars was formed it may have had twice as much water as did the early earth.

EDUCATION

COLLEGES & UNIVERSITIES

At some colleges, you're just a number. At New College, you're number one.

If a conventional liberal arts college made that claim, we wouldn't blame you for being skeptical.

But New College isn't conventional. It's unusual.

Although it's part of Hofstra University, New College has really been a college apart since 1959. Here, there are no crowded lecture halls. Or professors with so many students they can't know anyone's name. Or rigid course requirements for the B.A. degree.

Instead, every student is an individual "apprentice" personally guided by a "master" scholar in the student's chosen field. And the only major requirement is to choose a concentration: Humanities, Social Sciences, Creative Studies, Natural Sciences, Interdisciplinary Studies (with emphasis optional in Business, Child Study, Education, Community Services) and Applied Programs available in Pre-Medical, Pre-Legal, and Psychology.

Once a concentration is chosen, the student is free to pursue it in several ways. By independent projects outside the classroom. By joining small workshops and seminars. Or by arranging off-campus internships, in which theoretical knowledge can be practically applied.

Whatever the method, learning at New College is always an individual process. A process by which a student is never just a number. But number one.

Fellowships for study and/or research at graduate or post-doctoral levels and visiting professorships in 1977-78

at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem and at the Technion—Israel Institute of Technology, Haifa

GRADUATE AND POST-DOCTORAL FELLOWSHIPS

ELIGIBILITY: Lady Davis Fellows will be selected on the basis of demonstrated excellence in their studies, promise of distinction in their chosen fields of specialization and qualities of mind, intellect and character.

Post-doctoral candidates shall have completed their doctoral dissertation before arrival in Israel.

All Fellowship awards are subject to the candidate's being accepted by the respective institution.

The Graduate and Post-doctoral Fellowships are tenable for a period of one or two years. In special circumstances the award may be extended for a third year. The grant is intended to defray the cost of the Fellow's travel and tuition fees and to meet reasonable living expenses.

APPLICATION: Graduate candidates may apply during their senior academic year, or after they have undertaken study in a graduate school. Post-doctoral candidates may apply at an early stage of their professional career (not later than 3 years after completion of their doctoral dissertation).

Graduate and Post-doctoral candidates, including Israelis abroad, may obtain application forms from the Lady Davis Fellowship Trust, P.O. Box 1255, Jerusalem, Israel.

VISITING PROFESSORSHIPS

These are tenable for periods from one trimester (or semester) to a year. The grant includes a professorial salary and travel. Candidates should apply in writing to the same address with full curriculum vitae and other relevant information.

DEADLINE FOR APPLICATION

Completed applications of all candidates must reach the Office of the Trust not later than January 1, 1977

THE HEBREW UNIVERSITY OF JERUSALEM

The Hebrew University of Jerusalem offers a small number of post-doctoral fellowships for the 1977/78 academic year, in the Humanities, Social Sciences, Natural Sciences, Agriculture and Medicine.

Candidates may apply at an early stage of their professional career (not later than 3 years after completion of their doctoral dissertation) to P.O.B. 1255, Jerusalem, Israel.

...the Coleman report stated "Schools bring little influ-...ar on a child's achievement ...ependent of his background and general social context." In the late sixties and early seventies, education researchers such as James S. Coleman and Christopher Jencks continued to point out the obvious, that remedial dollar poultices applied to school improvement apart from home, mean only temporary achievement gains, if any. The missing educational link, come upon anthropologically, sociologically and pedagogically, was the family.

Hence, family-centered learning, a move away from the notion cherished by a number of professionals, that parents should not meddle in teaching, because their job is to send well fed, freshly scrubbed young vacuums to the learning place, where learning will take place. The difficulty is that learning does not necessarily happen, particularly when home support is lacking, as the fact that the early gains of children in Head Start centers generally evens out after several years demonstrates.

Family-centered learning comes in a number of guises. Preschool early intervention programs, such as the Brookline Early Education Project, run with Harvard help and private money by the Brookline Mass., school system, have been developed to help parents help educate their children from birth. Several agencies of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare have other programs. Home visits are among the techniques used in the Office of Child Development's Home Start program, during which trainers teach parents how to play/teach. Home Start is available through Head Start to 340,000 children. The Child and Family Resource Program of the child development office wants to set up prenatal-preschool-school links; 3,000 children are now involved in pilot projects. There is Project Follow Through run by the Office of Education, another demonstration program involving 76,000 children. Now, as preschool children graduate from preschool programs, the primary schools they enter are beginning to recognize the need to continue to reinforce an educational partnership with the home. Such programs are few, but the number is growing.

One of the most down-to-earth programs to focus on the parent-as-educator and to design practical, everyday ways for parents and relatives (defined as "anyone over 10") to strengthen the home learning environment has been developed by Mrs. Dorothy Rich of the Home and School Institute at Trinity College, in Washington, D.C. The Rich approach to educational parenting combines common sense ideas in a deceptively simple format. She begins with the belief that "home is the make or break institution" and that the real need is "to change attitudes about where learning happens." On the theory that learning does not just happen 8 A.M. to 3 P.M. at school, Mrs. Rich uses home as a learning device with built-in learning centers—the kitchen, the bathroom, the living room—to supplement and reinforce the three R's. The object is to help raise the achievement abilities of the child by shoring up the confidence of the parents as teachers.

Mrs. Rich's aim is to help parents realize that they can "teach with anything, that they can use anything in their environment." The approach is inherently ecological—no gimmicky or educational software brought home. Rather, the stuff of the everyday environment—hats, pots, paper bags, socks—is looked at afresh, in effect, recycled imaginatively.

The Benton Harbor recipes, one every two weeks, have been designed jointly by teachers, parents and the staff of the Home and School Institute. Typed on a single sheet of paper, using the institute's "cookbook" method for kitchen-style reading reinforcement (find the "b's" on all the soup labels), the recipes include Spaghetti Letters, The Grocery Bag, Shopping for Rhymes. Spaghetti Letters requires "one cup of cooked spaghetti (no sauce)," a cookie sheet and the alphabet. "Child points to the letter you name . . . child gets to shape the letter he just named using the spaghetti pieces." Ten minutes. Shopping for Rhymes helps the child find objects that rhyme with words on a trip to the grocery store. "I need something that rhymes with rope, please go get the cake of ——. Child answers SOAP and gets the soap."

As soon as a recipe has been done, the parent returns an activity check list to school.

When 218 Washington, D.C. area children were tested last year after using the institute's recipes for 16 weeks, their reading scores had improved significantly, though their math had not. Now the institute's math and science recipes are being strengthened, and, together with reading are being readied for a Julia Child-style demonstration show for television. Math recipes might call for the child to use the bathroom scale to weigh self and other objects, count the tiles around the bath, match and count the socks in the laundry, count the sheets and fold them into fractional parts, use yardsticks to measure the house, read the speedometer. There is a Gas Station Math Quiz—how many gallons needed, cost per gallon, miles per gallon. Science recipes might deal with ice—why it melts, how fast it freezes—or describe the noises kitchen appliances make, experiment with objects that float or sink in the bath tub.

Summarizing the theory and the practice of the program, Mrs. Rich said: "At home when you talk about the bathroom you're in science, or the kitchen you're in science. The recipes get parents and children talking to each other, and interacting with language is going to make a difference in a child's achievement."

Last spring, the institute conducted a teacher-training workshop in Fowler, Calif., near Fresno. The Fowler district superintendent, O. John Taylor, had observed that after a decade of special government funding, children were not making the academic gains he had expected.

A common characteristic of children doing well in school, cutting across racial, linguistic and economic lines, Mr. Taylor says, was a family that reinforced basic skills at home. He has found the institute approach "a tremendous starting point for using creative energy. People begin thinking in practical terms about how to do the cookbook-type thing. Especially as lower-class people do the recipes, we've noticed that a little input into lower-class kids seems to have more impact than a little input into middle-class children."

Where We Stand

Most of the Public Sees Flaws in Home

Poll Shows Broad Support for Schools

We frequently hear that "the American public has lost faith in the schools." Those who make this allegation can cite dozens of books published over the last decade, as well as radio and TV specials and newspaper articles, condemning the schools. Nevertheless, there is ample evidence to show that the charge is simply not true.

One piece of evidence is the fact that of all the federal legislation vetoed by President Ford—and President Nixon before him—school bills were the ones most often adopted by the Congress over presidential opposition. And, in overriding presidential vetoes, the congressional votes were often far above the needed two-thirds majority. These overrides reflect the view of members of Congress that the schools need more federal aid. And since representatives are political figures whose election depends upon popularity with their constituents, we may also conclude that in the eyes of the Congress the American people have not lost faith in their schools, that they still support their schools and that they favor more federal aid.

Last week the eighth annual "Survey of the Public's Attitudes Toward the Public Schools" was issued. This is an annual Gallup poll sponsored by the Charles F. Kettering Foundation. Its results appear in the October issue of Phi Delta Kappan. The poll shows that the condemnation of the schools found in so many recent books and in press coverage is not shared by the public. When asked to rate the schools A, B, C, D or Fail, the public rates the schools as follows: A – 13 per cent, B – 29 per cent, C – 28 per cent, D – 10 per cent, Fail – 6 per cent, and 14 per cent responded "Don't Know" or gave no answer. While these were the responses given by all who were polled, the schools fared even better with parents who had children in the public schools. The results were: A – 16 per cent, B – 34 per cent, C – 30 per cent, D – 10 per cent, Fail – 5 per cent, and 5 per cent gave no response. One would hardly expect from editorial columns that 80 per cent of all the parents of public school children rate the schools A, B, or C and only 5 per cent say the schools are failing. It might be hard to find any other institution in our society—public or private—which rates so well.

Asked what would do most to improve the quality of schools, the public avoided the usual demands for "accountability," "innovations" and the like. Instead, the top three recommendations were: devote more attention to the teaching of basic skills; enforce stricter discipline; meet individual needs of students. Moreover, the public has shifted its view on the question of whether all high school students should be required to pass a standard nationwide examination in order to get a high school diploma. In 1958, 50 per cent said "yes," but now 65 per cent favor the proposal.

The public accepts a conclusion drawn from the newly reported decline in test scores; 59 per cent say that the decline does show that the quality of education is deteriorating. Only 16 per cent said that the "tests are not reliable" as a reason for the decline. Sixty-five per cent put the blame on "less parent attention, concern and supervision of the child;" 52 per cent said, "Students aren't as motivated to do that well." Forty-nine per cent blamed "too much television viewing."

In spite of the recommendations of several national commissions that the age when compulsory schooling stops be lowered, the public, 66 per cent to 30 per cent, opposed the idea.

Seventy-seven per cent favored the idea that the public schools offer courses to parents on how to help their children in school, and 51 per cent said they would be willing to pay additional taxes to support such a program. Thus, in spite of the "blame the teacher" emphasis in most recent books and press reports, the public tends to believe that parents rather than teachers are the weak educational link at present.

The poll also shows that the public is divided on the question of whether teacher unions have helped or harmed the quality of schools, with 22 per cent saying that the unions help, 38 per cent that they hurt, 27 per cent that they make no difference, and 13 per cent don't know. Parents of schoolchildren are slightly more positive about the role of teacher unions than the public at large.

Another interesting finding has to do with the question of what subjects should be bargained by teachers. Attacks on teacher organizations and on the very process of public employee bargaining have been common, with critics saying that only salary, hours, vacations and holidays should be negotiated and that professional and educational matters should be left to the discretion of supervisors and school boards. But the public thinks differently. Asked whether teacher unions should bargain about such matters as class size, "the curriculum and teaching methods," the public favored the idea 52 per cent to 39 per cent.

This poll, like others before it, should not become the basis of immediate policy changes: Polls, after all, tend to reflect the reactions of the public to current problems. It may be that, just as the public was too hasty in blaming teachers for school failure in the past, it is wrong in shifting the blame to parents. But, while one can quarrel with some of its aspects, this poll, like its predecessors, shows that, no matter what the editorial writers say, the public thinks well of the schools and supports them. This support should be translated into additional dollars after Election Day.

continuing education at COLUMBIA

This fall Columbia University, one of the world's leading research and teaching institutions, inaugurates a Program for Continuing Education. While continuing education is hardly a new idea, it takes on a different dimension at Columbia as the University opens its scholarly resources and distinguished faculty to a new and larger public—those people who take learning seriously.

The initial phase of the program begins in early October, when Columbia offers a series of non-credit courses in areas of both traditional importance and contemporary interest: Art History and the Arts, Cultural Studies, History and Social Studies, Literature, Science and Mathematics, and Environment and Urban Planning. Courses range in duration from five to ten weeks, and represent a variety of fields and topics, current as well as historical.

- All classes meet in the early evenings or on Saturdays.
- Students enrolled in courses may use Columbia's extensive facilities, including the libraries.
- Indoor parking is available on campus, and the campus is easily reached by bus or subway.
- Registration is by mail.
- Fees are moderate.

Since its founding in 1754, teaching excellence has been one of Columbia's greatest strengths. Drawing on this tradition, the instructional staff for Continuing Education will include some of Columbia's most distinguished scholar-teachers, and all instruction will meet the University's rigorous standards.

If you wish to find out more about Continuing Education at Columbia, return the coupon or telephone for a bulletin.

RNs-Staff Builders can help you go where you're needed.

California or Florida

Two RNs tell how!

Carolyn Lee, R.N. "Staff Builders has shown a personal interest in me. They got me an apartment the first day I was in Los Angeles. There are many more opportunities for an R.N. in L.A. than in N.Y. Seems to be a greater emphasis on in-service education, too. I love living in L.A. Weather's just great, cost of living's lower. The city as a whole is much cleaner."

Laureen Sgrillo, R.N. "Staff Builders gave me the opportunity to make a dream a reality. They cut out a lot of the effort of moving and facilitated my arrival. My California license was received quicker than if I had sent the application myself. The hospital's intriguing ... newest equipment ... definite challenge to your nursing skills ... plus California sun, fun and guys galore!"

Right now, Staff Builders Medical Services is under contract to find 90 qualified nurses for California assignments at prestigious hospitals, plus dozens of top nurses for posts in Florida. Here are just a few reasons why you should contact us now about these positions:

- You'll start earning top pay immediately
- Your travel costs will be reimbursed
- Most specialties needed; all tours available
- Some openings for new grads
- Fringe Benefits; special bonus plans
- Stay only as long as you like
- We'll help you with California and Florida Licenses
- Housing: we'll help you match your needs to local availabilities

We're hiring this week at our New York offices. Call Nurse Relocation Manager.

No Winner, but a Start

Who won?

That is the question the experts would like to be able to answer after the first of the Presidential debates. The pollsters will add up the percentages and publish their inconclusive conclusions. The politicians will claim victory for their side and assign defeat to the opposition

The plain fact is that the first of the debates brought neither victory nor defeat to Gerald Ford or Jimmy Carter. It would be surprising if either candidate had generated in the vast and curious audience any fervent enthusiasm. Or, for that matter, antagonism.

Messrs. Ford and Carter suffered from a severe case of overbriefing that filtered personal authenticity out of their responses. They came with too many prepackaged answers. They had too many statistics to unleash, too many prepared positions to which to retreat under challenge. Cautious and predictable staff work left too little room for the candidates' personalities and principles to assert themselves.

Under pressure to be "specific" about the issues, Mr. Carter—and to an only slightly lesser degree Mr. Ford as well—tried too hard to translate the future into hard, cash figures. It is futile and even misleading to pledge a balanced budget at some definite point several years hence. Or to spell out a precise schedule for tax reform or for public spending. Both candidates surely know the limitations of the President's powers in such legislative matters.

While trying too hard to be specific about what is beyond their personal control, Messrs. Ford and Carter paid too little attention to the Presidency's very real power and responsibility to chart a course, to raise the nation's sights—in short, to lead. Both candidates skipped altogether the overriding dilemma of urban America.

President Ford deliberately and quite effectively drove home the image of Mr. Carter as the descendant of the Democratic big spenders; Mr. Carter equally effectively fell back on his record in governmental streamlining as Governor of Georgia. But their encounter only came to life when Mr. Carter departed from the statisticians' course long enough to speak with humane concern about the plight of the unemployed and the poor.

It was finally in his summation that Mr. Carter offered a glimpse of what many Americans had undoubtedly hoped the debates might offer. In contrast to President Ford's banalities, Mr. Carter spoke of the need to regain "the vision of what our country can and ought to be."

It was at least a beginning of the real debate, too late to rescue the evening from the tide of numbing recitations, but not too late to give a hint of what the two candidates really ought to be talking about. In the next two nationwide debates, Mr. Ford and Mr. Carter would do well to free themselves from the grip of their managers and tacticians and give the American people a chance to meet them as they really are—to learn their broad view of the issues and their philosophies, their aims and their hopes for the future of the country.

Rhodesia—Sunrise at Last?

After nearly eleven years of going it alone in an increasingly hostile continent and world, Rhodesia's white minority Government has bowed to the inevitable. Prime Minister Ian Smith, who said as late as last March that "not in a thousand years" would he turn over power to Rhodesia's black majority, has agreed to do exactly that within two years—the maximum transfer period designated in the British-American proposals pressed on Mr. Smith in South Africa last weekend by Secretary of State Kissinger.

Unless hitches develop—and the possibilities remain enormous—the shift of power to representatives of Rhodesia's six million blacks may begin in a matter of weeks with the formation of a multiracial interim government to write a Constitution leading to legal independence. Britain and the United States are especially anxious to get the transition under way promptly in order to minimize the opportunities for meddling by other powers, particularly the Soviet Union.

Critical questions remain after Mr. Smith's acceptance of Mr. Kissinger's plan: Can he make the agreement stick with his Rhodesian Front Party and with the country's 270,000 whites, who are outnumbered by the blacks 24-to-1? Will the whites really negotiate in good faith on the two-year constitutional timetable in a multiracial Council of State, or will they stall, as in the past, hoping that divisions among the blacks will somehow enable the whites to retain actual power?

But the most crucial question of all about the Kissinger plan is whether it will be acceptable to black leaders truly representative and thus qualified to negotiate in behalf of the majority in the country the blacks call Zimbabwe. Mr. Kissinger is obviously relying heavily on Joshua Nkomo, often described as the most moderate of Rhodesia's black nationalist leaders, a longtime friend of President Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia and yet a man who has received support from the Soviet Union.

Mr. Nkomo represents only one faction, though probably the largest, in the now-defunct African National Council, however. He is bitterly opposed by a large group of blacks inside Rhodesia, and it is doubtful that he has much influence with the biggest guerrilla force now operating from bases in Mozambique. The guerrilla leaders long ago forswore further negotiations with the white regime; yet their participation will be essential if a peaceful political evolution is to have any chance.

Even Mr. Nkomo, who hopes most whites stay on to help build a multiracial Zimbabwe, sees "very serious flaws" in the Kissinger plan. He will find it hard to accept equal black-white representation and a white chairman on the interim Council of State, along with the requirement for a two-thirds majority on major decisions. Black leaders will also object to the provision that whites occupy the key ministries of defense and law and order in the interim administration.

On these matters, Mr. Kissinger will have to rely on the maximum cooperation from the African heads of the so-called "front-line" Governments in the area, especially on President Kaunda and President Julius Nyerere of Tanzania. Britain and the United States must also continue to rely on Prime Minister John Vorster of South Africa to keep the Rhodesian whites in line. Mr. Kissinger's promise that acceptance of his plan would bring an end to the United Nations sanctions against Rhodesia can be redeemed only by the Security Council; and that could be obstructed by the Soviet Union and China.

On his 10-day African shuttle, Mr. Kissinger has negotiated with all of the skill and finesse he had previously displayed in the Middle East crises. He has accomplished more on Rhodesia than most observers had expected. But, as he well recognizes, the road to a solution that would defuse the peril of a white-black conflagration in southern Africa remains long and hazardous.

Danger to the Ozone

When scientists a few years ago put forward the theory that gases from aerosol spray cans might increase skin cancers and seriously affect the earth's climate, they triggered an expected degree of ridicule and the usual cries of "hysteria." Now a panel of the National Academy of Sciences finds that these fluorocarbon gases are in fact weakening the planet's ozone layer, threatening precisely the consequences predicted.

The experts, who have been studying the problem at the request of perplexed Federal agencies, recommend regulatory action within two years. The delay is not urged out of uncertainty as to whether a curb is needed, but only to establish, if possible, the exact extent of the danger to the earth's ozone shield and the degree to which use of these gases should be curtailed. At the end of that time, the panel's chairman says, "even if we're still uncertain" on these points, "we'll recommend regulation."

The principle involved here has been well summarized by Dr. Russell W. Peterson, retiring chairman of the President's Council on Environmental Quality: "Chemicals are not innocent until proven guilty." Even the cost-benefit ratio so often invoked by skeptics on environmental protection makes clear the case for reducing the upward flow of fluorocarbons.

The cost, for the most part, is the inconvenience of finding safe and efficient substitutes for deodorant and hair sprays, whose propellants account for more than half the worldwide use of the gases. The benefit is a reduction in the very real danger that ultraviolet radiation will get through the ozone layer, weakened by components of the gas, in such increased volume as to heighten the incidence of skin cancer and to warm the earth's atmosphere with unpredictable effect.

This special committee of the academy called for regulatory action within a limited time; it did not recommend against some kinds of action now. It urged immediate legislation, for example, to enable Government to regulate fluorocarbon uses "selectively" at the appropriate moment and to require the labeling of aerosol cans so that consumers can stop sending the gases into the atmosphere right now if they wish.

We would urge, in addition, that Congress take quick action to concentrate control over fluorocarbons in one agency, preferably the E.P.A., and that the Government move as quickly as possible toward an international convention on the subject. Production of these propellants is no more confined to a single country than the effects are confined to those that use them.

The Monarchs

The season's last hatch of Monarch butterflies is on the wing, and the milkweed they fed on is turning to a rich golden yellow. The Monarchs soon will be swarming and starting south. Incredible as it seems, these big orange and black butterflies migrate, even as the birds. Those from our area go all the way to Florida for the winter.

Sometimes the Monarchs travel in single file in streams that reach for miles. Sometimes they go in unorganized flocks full of color we normally see only in sunsets. At night they rest in trees, chilled and almost dormant. The next day they have to wait for the sun to warm them before they can move. Then they are off again, persistently southward. They have been timed flying twenty-five miles an hour. They are supposed to fear open water, but they migrated from mainland California to Hawaii years ago and now are fairly common there.

The Monarchs winter in the sun and start north again in the spring. But only a few of those that go south in the fall return. Some females stop along the way, lay eggs on young milkweed plants, and die soon after. The eggs hatch, pupate and join the migration northward. They usually arrive here just as the young milkweed is leafing out, and they lay their eggs on it. Their caterpillars feed exclusively on milkweed. Because milkweed grows in rubble and on vacant lots, the Monarch is the butterfly most often seen in the cities.

Why they migrate is unknown. How they find their way is a mystery. But they are a vividly colorful element in one of the great natural rhythms that mark the year's seasons.

Letters to the Editor

Why Americans Don't Vote

To the Editor:

The lowest voter turnout since 1948 has been forecast for the coming Presidential election, according to recent issues of The Times. The projected decline is attributed largely to the public's lack of interest in the candidates and in the political process, but there is also general agreement that our election procedures, particularly registration, discourage voting. Apathy is a systemic ill, hard to cure, but procedural defects can and should be corrected promptly.

Unfortunately, most proposals for overcoming registration barriers do not go to the heart of the problem, but are addressed mainly to changing deadlines, simplifying forms or tinkering with the system in other ways. Only the most fleeting mention has been made of one basic reform that might make a difference, one that is in fact practiced in every Western democracy save our own.

In those other countries, government takes responsibility for compiling lists of eligible voters. As a result, anyone not disqualified by youth, residence or similar reason may walk up to the polls on election day, find himself registered and cast a ballot. Voters who become interested only in the climactic final weeks or days of a campaign are not excluded.

We like to think of ourselves as leaders among nations in free access to the franchise. In fact, voting participation is now much higher abroad. Perhaps it is time to join other democracies in establishing a system of automatic registration as recommended by several major national studies of American elections.

We are able to see that all youngsters are enrolled in school. We are able to send tax bills to almost everyone. Why can't we also identify and admit to the polls all citizens qualified to vote? JEANNE RICHMAN

Scarsdale, N. Y., Sept. 18, 1976

To the Editor:

I greatly resent the calumny that nonvoters are necessarily derelict in their duty to America.

I am an intelligent, dedicated, public-spirited citizen who refuses to vote when my options are restricted. Only a simpleton would consider the differences between Ford and Carter to be so monumental that the American Government would be in jeopardy by picking one over the other. What difference which one is elected? Our choices in 1976 are as farcical as in any two-bit banana republic.

I voted, and will vote again, when people of stature are running—Willkie, Stevenson, etc. My non-vote is a vote against banality, penury of spirit and spinelessness. I resent being led by mediocrities. The two-party system has become the left of center and the right of center of the same ideology.

I'll vote again when I'm given greater choices. I'll vote when the ballot includes (co-equally with Ford and Carter) George Lincoln Rockwell, George Wallace, Eugene McCarthy, etc.

I'd rather watch reruns of "I Love Lucy" than a debate between Tweedledee Ford and Tweedledum Carter. At least you knew what Lucy stood for. CALVIN KAUFMAN

New York, Sept. 14, 1976

To the Editor:

The fact that the polls show that many registered voters do not plan to vote in the national elections should not surprise anyone. Since World War II, the decisions of the elected President and Congress have been repeatedly nullified by appointed Federal judges and bureaucrats. Neither the people nor their representatives voted for busing or abortion. Nevertheless, busing and abortion are the law of the land. Why vote? JOHN CERVASE

Newark, Sept. 15, 1976

Ford and Vietnam

To the Editor:

If President Ford were truly a statesman that he claims he is, he could have demonstrated his commitment to world peace in dramatic fashion by supporting, or at least not opposing, Vietnam's application for membership in the United Nations. Instead, he has taken a myopic view, preferring partisan political advantage of the moment to long-term stabilization of relations with a country likely to play an increasingly important role in regional Asian affairs.

One can question whether this decision will really contribute to bringing about the result the President evidently desires, viz., the release of information about American M.I.A.'s. Vietnam has hardly apt to be well-disposed to providing such information if its attempts to gain entry to the United Nations are rebuffed by the U.S. And the Administration has no real leverage by which it can force Vietnam to yield information. Obstinacy on one side will only provoke obstinacy on the other.

What is most shameful is that the U.S. appears to be denying an obligation it clearly has under the Paris peace agreement. Article 21 explicitly stipulates that the U.S. "will contribute to healing the wounds of war and to postwar reconstruction of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam and throughout Indochina." But the Department of State's note of July 19, 1976, published in The Times (Sept. 1) avers that the U.S. "does not consider that it has an obligation to provide reconstruction assistance to Vietnam." Vietnam has at least made a token gesture toward carrying out the provisions of the agreement concerning information about M.I.A.'s. What has the U.S. done in return? Nothing. Is this any way to conduct foreign policy? SANFORD G. THATCH

Princeton, N. J., Sept. 14, 1976

To the Editor:

The United States would abide by international law in vetoing the admission of Vietnam. But we would oppose it for the weaker of several reasons. Vietnam is an aggressor state and is continuing its aggressions now against Thailand. The U.N. is not a university body. It is a collective assembly of "peace-loving" nations and Vietnam is just not eligible.

Moreover, Laotian Gen. Khamphay Boussarath, who was in charge of prisoner exchange between the North Vietnamese and the United States in Laos in 1973, has stated that there were 200 American pilots shot down over Laos. He is a parachutist and knows training and points out that the survival incidence is high for parachuting pilots. The Laotians took these men who survived over to the North Vietnamese.

Instead of pusillanimously decrying the inadequacy of the list of current M.I.A.'s, we should be effectively demanding, in the councils of the world, to know what happened to those missing airmen. Many should be alive if they were not murdered. ROBERT MOSS

Dallas, Sept. 17, 1976

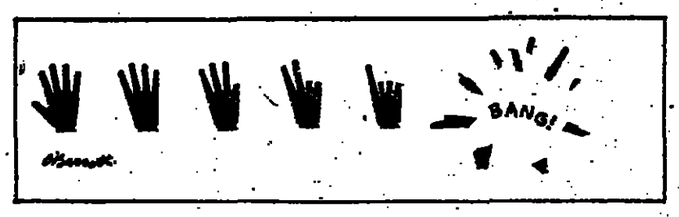
To the Editor:

It is no secret that Secretary Kissinger's present series of negotiations with black and white African leaders is widely suspected not to be a peace mission at all but simply the pursuit of special American interests. Our unreformed hostile attitude toward Vietnam does not help the credibility of peaceful intentions in Africa.

What does President Ford hope to achieve by vetoing Vietnam's entry into the U.N.? It certainly will not bring forth whatever information Hanoi may be withholding unjustly. If our former enemies are willing to let bygones be bygones, is it in the interest of this nation to keep alive the memory of the last war or, for that matter, the memory of our obstinate and futile policy to exclude Mao's China from the world organization?

ADOLPHE FURT

Vienna, Sept. 15, 1976



What 'Modest' Defense Cuts Can Do

To the Editors:

This being an election year, it was easy to predict that a major demand of the liberals would be the budget cutting of the Defense Department. The Democratic Party and Governor Carter are talking about "modest" cuts of $5 billion to $7 billion. But little is heard of how the cuts are to be made.

Should we reduce the number of men and women in uniform? This certainly could be done, although while we are at lower manpower levels than we were prior to the Korean conflict the Soviet Union is expanding its forces. Should we reduce the size of the civilian complement working for defense? This could also be easily accomplished, adding, of course, to the rolls of the unemployed and forcing ever more uniformed personnel to pick up that workload.

Should further reductions be made in the procurement of modern weapons, despite the outmoded nature of some of our military's most basic equipment, such as the B-52 bomber and the M-60 tank? Or, finally, should the benefits and pay of our Defense Department personnel be cut in the attempt to somehow save billions of dollars? This could be done only if we ignore the essential need to have quality and highly motivated armed forces.

In sum, the reduction of the Defense Department budget will remain an item of popular political rhetoric, but this rhetoric can be implemented only at the risk of problems far worse than a large military budget offending the sensitivity of the left. DAVID HOWARD

West Point, N.Y., Sept. 18, 1976

'Safe' Flu Vaccine

To the Editor:

Your Aug. 22 editorial on "informed consent" suggests that immunization for swine flu is an experimental procedure using an experimental drug. This is not true.

The influenza vaccines have been in use for more than twenty years and are well tested; the incidence of complications is remarkably low. The vaccine used in the swine flu program is not different in its overall nature from the vaccines used in the past but has been modified this year as in other years to accommodate the new flu virus strain. Because of our plans for extensive public immunization, this year's flu vaccine has been more extensively tested than any previous vaccine. It is very safe and highly effective.

Congress asked the National Commission for the Protection of Human Subjects of Biomedical Research to consult in the preparation of informed consent forms and procedures because the Federal Government has agreed to participate in the liability risks involved in this massive program. The commission has substantial experience in issues of informed consent for experimental as well as routine and accepted medical procedures such as public immunization. Its utilization in this case represents Congressional prudence in overseeing this massive undertaking. Nevertheless, it is important to distinguish between the comprehensive "informed consent" required by regulation in a research procedure and the usual consent given by a patient for routine medical care.

To imply that the flu vaccine is experimental is a disservice to the public because it could discourage many from volunteering to be vaccinated. Reluctance now to participate in a safe, innocuous and routine medical procedure could have serious implications should there be a swine flu epidemic this winter. THEODORE COOPER, M.D.

Lieut. Belenko Knows

To the Editor:

In a statement published in Pravda on Sept. 15, the Soviet Government has denied that Lieutenant Belenko fled to the West in search of freedom. On the contrary, it maintained that the actions taken by Japan and the United States in connection with Belenko's forced landing at Hakodate airfield were essentially an act of kidnapping, not to say international banditry.

Would it be asking too much for Belenko to appear before the world community—at a news conference, on television or at the U.N.—and say who is right? ALEXANDER YANOV

Flushing, N. Y., Sept. 19, 1976

The Kissinger Mission

To the Editor:

Is it just coincidence that Secretary Kissinger is on a ramble in Africa with the Presidential election just weeks away? The overall purpose of his diplomacy is to foster better treatment of blacks. Whether he succeeds remains to be seen. But the mere fact that he is trying will not be lost on blacks in the United States, whom the polls currently write off so far as the G.O.P. is concerned.

Many are disinclined to believe that the Kissinger mission is anything but a State Department effort to preserve balance and stability. But if Kissinger should just happen to have a hand in an agreement advancing the cause of the blacks, with the public announcement coming just before Election Day, surely some cynics will be created on the spot, joining those whose naïveté dissolved in 1972 when the Nixon Administration promised "peace at hand" in Vietnam just before Election Day, a peace that came only after a cruel and senseless onslaught by the B-52's. No Sound, No Fury

By Robert Brustein

NEW HAVEN—The two-man show that opened at the Walnut Street Theater in Philadelphia last Thursday night was performed behind two lecterns separated by a modern abstract form that vaguely resembled a bomb. Though it is cruel to judge a work that is obviously still in out-of-town tryouts, this may well prove an appropriate symbol of the entire tour.

Considering the state of recent American acting, it would be unfair to compare the featured players of the current revival with their famous predecessors. Still, one cannot help observing that when the show was originally produced in 1858 it had a cast that possessed not only great theatrical skill but intriguing physical presence—the short and rotund Stephen A. Douglas, nicely contrasted with the tall and angular Abraham Lincoln.

Nor can one forget how, in the 1960 revival, the steely gaze and rapid-fire delivery of John F. Kennedy made an overnight star out of one who had previously been a relatively unknown supporting player, while his sensitive co-star, Richard M. Nixon, though outperformed, was nevertheless able to demonstrate a unique talent (the envy of actors ever since) for making beads of perspiration materialize, at will, on his upper lip.

One need not be nostalgic about the past in order to be disappointed by the present performance. Attired in almost identical costumes, each of the actors has been carefully trained in the contemporary Method school of low-keyed domestic realism, and each has been well rehearsed. But neither displayed much ability to overcome the handicap of the opening tableau, which found them stiff and expressionless, as if they were already posing for portraits on Mount Rushmore.

Jimmy Carter, who played The Challenger, was rumored earlier to have had difficulty getting a firm grasp on his characterization (there was some indecision over whether he was to play a devout conservative or a liberal swinger), but I found his portrayal of a compassionate citizen, indignant over the callousness of his opponent and inspirited by the nobility of his countrymen, relatively consistent, even occasionally convincing.

Mr. Ford, playing The Incumbent (a role for which some say he has been miscast), also used one of those regional dialects so popular in American theater these days, drawling out one-syllable words with a gallant disregard for monotony. In his steady characterization of a plodding, deliberate public servant dedicated to ending something called "the long national nightmare," Mr. Ford ran the risk of substituting for it a long national nap, since like Mr. Carter he intoned his speeches as if he had chewed too many tranquilizers in the dressing room before the show.

The evening, in short, lacked passion. And though both actors expressed their disapproval of the "energy crisis," each seemed to be suffering an energy crisis of his own. (It was wise of the producers to forbid us any glimpse of the audience, lest our opinion of the show be influenced by the sight of spectators laid out in the aisles.)

The script is in the process of revision and is generally improvised from night to night, so I will refrain from extended comment on its quality. I will only express puzzlement over why actors would take a perfectly good vehicle which has stood the test of time and update it for the sake of some fashionable contemporary "relevance." Even if you approve of tampering with classics, you would probably agree that the climactic moments of the current production, involving tax reform and veto power, are a far cry from the sensational climaxes of the 1960 version when the audience was brought to its feet over the U-2 incident, the missile gap and the quality of Mr. Nixon's makeup.

In fact, the only effective innovation of the current production, to my mind, was the inspired 27-minute play-within-a-play, when both actors stood immobilized in silence, staring stonily ahead, visible only from the waist up —though even this was obviously stolen from the works of Samuel Beckett.

The show has two more previews, after which one of the actors will move it to Washington with a much larger cast. It opens to the general public on Jan. 20, with a guaranteed run of at least four years. If this production represents the best the American theater can offer nowadays, then a general lethargy may spread from the actors to the audience, and the state of apathy will be the next admitted to the Union.

Robert Brustein, dean of the Yale School of Drama and director of the Yale Repertory Theater, has written other drama criticism.

In Search of Leadership

By William V. Shannon

WASHINGTON—The basic choice confronting voters in this election is whether they want a pleasing personality or a leader in the White House.

If the people are content with a pleasing personality, Gerald Ford will do very well. He is financially honest, about as candid as most political men, and is a likable person. But he is not a leader. He lacks the intellectual gifts, the imagination, and the inner force, that leaders have.

Mr. Ford rocks no boats, offers no challenges to the conventional wisdom, and has no deeply held convictions that he is not prepared to temper—or drop altogether—if political necessity requires. He is a good listener.

He does not always understand what he is being told but he tries. When he is through listening he figuratively looks around to see if there is somebody who will do something about the problem or at least move it off his desk.

He does not care very much. He does not care, for example, about the many forms of misery that create social problems in America and in the world. He has normal compassion for family and friends. But for those outside the range of his vision, he lacks the imagination to visualize their misery or to hold their problems for very long in the forefront of his mind.

Mr. Ford does not even care all that much whether he is re-elected. His vanity is engaged at the moment and he hates to lose. But if he does lose, he will be delighted with his big pension and will play golf and ski and enjoy himself traveling. If he is re-elected, he will be out at Burning Tree with his lobbyist friends playing golf every weekend and one or two afternoons during the week as well. He will ski at Vail, take lots of trips, and make forgettable speeches. Either way, it will be a pleasant, sun-filled four years for him.

Mr. Ford is no worrier. Under a show of earnestness, he is as lighthearted as Mr. Micawber and as sure that something will turn up. After all, it always has. By being a regular fellow and thinking regular thoughts and being on the job, he has already gone a lot further than those who know his limited capacity would ever have predicted. World hunger and nuclear terror and surging inflation and financially strapped cities might worry some people, but Mr. Ford is sure he can bumble on for another four years as he has the last two.

Jimmy Carter, by contrast offers the nation an opportunity for leadership. He is an unknown quantity as a President. Any man is until he serves in the office. But Mr. Carter's seriousness, quickness of mind, and executive energies are apparent to everyone who has talked with him or studies his public record.

In baseball terminology, Jimmy Carter is a "take-charge guy." He relishes responsibility, sets high goals for himself, and knows how to organize himself and his team to reach those goals.

If Mr. Carter becomes President, he is sure to defend aggressively the interests of consumers and of the environment. There is a reasonable chance that he may reorganize the welter of Federal-state programs, and make the ponderous bureaucracies more responsive. He will lead the fight for a genuine tax reform and may succeed. There is a good chance that he will work out a national health care plan and achieve a major reform of welfare.

None of these aspirations is sure to be realized in a Carter Administration, but there is ground for hope on each of them. On the record of the last two years, there is no hope of realizing any of them in another Ford Administration.

Mr. Carter's empathy for the outcast and the defeated is genuine. He is a leader reaching for greatness. Although his reach is sure to exceed his grasp —as is true of every leader—he might make America once again a tribune of justice in the world community.

By contrast, no one who knows Mr. Ford's long, dreary record in the House, 25 years of plodding through hackdom, would ever accuse him of being a leader. One can paraphrase Winston Churchill's description of Neville Chamberlain—"He would make a good mayor of Grand Rapids—in a quiet year."

As against the reasonable prospect of high achievement in a Carter Administration, Mr. Ford offers four more years of drift, bluff, and fumble. Historically, it is the choice between the possibility of another Roosevelt and the certainty of another Coolidge. Americans as a people sometimes like to be on the move and sometimes like to rest easy. The Carter-Ford election offers that kind of choice.

A Tight Race in Texas

By Tom Wicker

DALLAS, Sept. 25 — On July 25, an unknown Georgian named Jimmy Carter met in the Stoneleigh P (for pharmacy) Cafe here with about 10 Texas Democrats who were looking for a Presidential candidate. They found one.

Mr. Carter returned to Dallas yesterday — exactly 14 months later — as the Democratic Presidential nominee. He addressed an audience of about 1,500 Texans roaring with enthusiasm, and made an impromptu second speech to about that many more who couldn't get into a hotel ballroom for the main event. On the platform with him was one of the original Stoneleigh P Ten, Jim Mattox the Democratic nominee for Congress from the Fifth Texas District, a part of Dallas County.

Mr. Mattox is favored to win his race, and it would make a romantic ending to the Stoneleigh P story if Mr. Carter were, too. But numerous interviews with politicians, journalists and voters suggest that Texas—the biggest state in Mr. Carter's Southern base — may be more nearly a toss-up today. The Democrats ought to win it, but the Republicans think they can pull it out, and the outlook is for a race as tight as a cowboy's Levi's.

Mr. Carter might have had Texas locked up by now. He swept the Democratic primary against a ticket headed by Senator Lloyd Bentsen and backed by Gov. Dolph Briscoe. His Southern Baptist religion and Georgia background gave him a big edge over Gerald Ford, who suffered his worst primary defeat here at the hands of Ronald Reagan.

After the Democratic National Convention, and with Governor Briscoe's enthusiastic endorsement bringing even conservative Democrats to his side, Mr. Carter had a big lead, as shown by various polls. The best evidence suggests, however, that that lead may have been squandered by a long summer of inactivity, by Mr. Carter's celebrated misfortunes in the national campaign, and by a bitter leadership fight in the state Democratic Party that diverted attention and effort from the Presidential campaign and may have disgruntled some of Mr. Carter's more liberal supporters (he backed Mr. Briscoe's successful chairman candidate, Calvin Guest).

Now the problems of the Carter campaign here have been compounded by the candidate's extraordinary interview in Playboy magazine — not so much by its religious and sexual aspects (although many of his Baptist backers here are said to regard his mere association with the magazine as truck with the devil) as by its slurs on Lyndon Johnson, the only Texan ever elected President. Perhaps more than in any other state, in Texas the Playboy interview could be a fatal misstep for Mr. Carter—and he spent much of yesterday here trying to explain and apologize for it.

Texas, moreover, can hardly be counted a sure thing for any Democratic Presidential candidate. With Lyndon Johnson on his ticket, John Kennedy barely carried it in 1960; with George Wallace diverting conservative votes from Richard Nixon, Hubert Humphrey just squeaked by in 1968—and the man widely credited for that victory, John Connally, is now the Republican chairman of the Ford campaign. Mr. Johnson carried the state as a native son in 1964, but George McGovern was swamped in 1972, and Adlai Stevenson lost Texas twice in the 50's.

Since the Texas primary, Mr. Carter has chosen the liberal Walter Mondale as his running mate and embraced a liberal Democratic platform—neither an asset in Texas. Republican leaders claim to have a more unified party than the strength of the Reagan movement might have suggested ("My heart belongs to Reagan but my vote belongs to Ford," reads a bumper sticker seen here). Mr. Reagan himself will be campaigning in Texas next week for Congressional candidates and the Ford ticket. John Connally is a tough, shrewd operator in this state, and its natural conservatism is expected to be in full flower this year, after the Watergate-inspired apathy of the 1974 elections.

So Mr. Carter has been losing momentum while the Republicans gained it, but a close Carter victory still should be possible, after what was perceived here as a draw in the first debate, if his national campaign begins to go better. He has a unified party and his Southern and Baptist connections. A successful registration drive has put 400,000 new voters, mostly Democrats, on the rolls since March 1—70,000 since Aug. 15, when the Democratic National Committee sent in $57,000 for a late registration drive.

Above all, the Democrats need a big turnout in the cities and among the "blacks, browns and blues" (blacks, Mexican-Americans and other blue-collar workers), who do not usually vote their real potential. A meeting this Sunday of state and national Democrats with A.F.L.-C.I.O. leaders to plan a get-out-the-vote program might well be the key to a Carter victory in Texas this fall.

"Look, we survived the fiscal crisis, didn't we? So why worry?"

There's not much to worry about if you're in good shape yourself right now.

But if you're distressed, lonely, ill or troubled you're starting to suffer more.

And time will make it worse.

Underfunded agencies grind slowly to a halt. People have only begun to hurt from cuts.

What's the answer? It could be United Fund, one of the most efficient charitable organizations.

91¢ of every dollar you donate really helps some person through the Fund's 425 community agencies, the Red Cross and Salvation Army. (Our expenses are a low 9%—we're run mostly by volunteers.)

So when you're asked to give at the office this year (and we ask only once a year), give a little more.

Clifford Irving Wins One

Clifford Irving, the writer imprisoned in connection with a phony book he wrote about the life of Howard Hughes, has cleared himself of fraud charges filed by the Internal Revenue Service. The I.R.S. said that Mr. Irving had "knowingly and fraudulently" concealed income from a movie made from a book of his, when he filed for bankruptcy in 1973. But a civil court judge ruled there was no intention to deceive in the bankruptcy petition, in which Irving claimed $110-million in liabilities and $770 in assets. Mr. Irving served as his own attorney in the case, and wrote a seven-page rebuttal to the arguments made by Government attorneys. "It was," he said, "one of the most satisfying works I have ever written.

Thanom Kittikachorn Returns

The return to Bangkok of the exiled former Thai Prime Minister, Thanom Kittikachorn, touched off a week of political activity. Mr. Thanom, head of a military junta overthrown in 1973, was forced into exile when leaders of the uprising demanded he either be deported or prosecuted for his part in the death of 72 civilians. He ostensibly returned last week to visit his father and to spend some time as a Buddhist monk, a common practice among Thai men. Government leaders at first did nothing, but when reaction to his return was mostly negative, Prime Minister Seni Pramoj said that Mr. Thanom would have to leave after his father's death. The anti-Thanom faction was not appeased, because Mr. Thanom's father, though 91 and ailing, is by no means near death. Angered by criticism from members of his own party, Mr. Seni resigned. Within 24 hours, he had accepted a request from his cabinet to return as Prime Minister.

Florida Woman Is Kidnapped

Shari L. Jaffa, the wife of a wealthy Florida real estate developer, has been reported kidnapped. Her husband, Richard Jaffa, said he had been unable to establish contact with the kidnappers since he was informed of her abduction. Mr. Jaffa said he received a phone call last Wednesday morning telling him his wife had been abducted and that he should pay $200,000 in ransom within an hour. He could only raise $50,000 and, following convoluted instructions, he then left the money at a designated place with a note explaining his inability to raise the rest. He asked for some evidence that his wife was still alive. When he received no reply within the next two days, he returned to the drop point and found his money still there. Mr. Jaffa has since raised the additional money, and issued a public plea to the kidnapper asking him to take the money and return Mrs. Jaffa.

Mr. Cunningham's Busy Week

Patrick Cunningham, the Bronx Democratic leader who fought a long court battle with the former Special Prosecutor, Maurice H. Nadjari, earlier this year, won one skirmish last week and lost another. A charge that Mr. Cunningham had been driving while impaired by alcohol when stopped by police last May was reduced to a charge of speeding. But two candidates backed by Mr. Cunningham's regulars for the State Supreme Court were defeated by reform candidates. It was the first time that the Bronx democratic regulars had failed to nominate its candidates for the Supreme Court. Despite the setback, Mr. Cunningham, whose two-year term as Bronx leader expires in 1978, seems assured of remaining in complete control of the Bronx party apparatus.

Thinner Wallets

Until recently the thinnest wallets were made from expensive seal skins. Then a new material was developed—Oxford Nylon. Pin Craft Corporation patented a unique line of wallets out of this durable woven material. Oxford Nylon is 2½ times thinner than leather.

The resulting wallets are lighter, longer wearing, flexible and very thin. Thus the Oxford Nylon wallet is more comfortable to wear, and your clothes look better without a wallet bulge. Great for gifts.

Because Oxford Nylon is a woven material your wallet can have your initials embroidered in it (at extra cost).

All models have window cases for 16 or more credit cards—available in 3 popular models:

SPORTSTER—Card case & billfold, for hip or shirt pocket. $6.00

CLASSIC—Hip pocket wallet includes a separate money and note compartment. $7.00

EXECUTIVE—Hip or coat wallet with a stacking rack for your 6 most used credit cards. $8.50.

OPEN LETTER TO JIMMY CARTER

FROM: Business Executives Move for New National Priori[ties]

Dear Governor Carter:

We, the undersigned, are practical business people who are pleased by many of your state[ments on] foreign and military policy, particularly that we cannot "have it both ways . . . both the world's [leading] champion of peace and the world's leading supplier of the weapons of war."

Religious leaders everywhere have preached brotherhood for centuries. Political leaders have [called] them unrealistic and impractical. But we business people, who must plan realistically for the future, [know] that we must have peace because if humankind does not abolish war, war will abolish humankind.

Our country is the strongest nation on earth militarily. But this has not given us security. On the c[ontrary] it is leading us and our adversaries into a future of less security, higher taxes, continued inflati[on and] ultimate destruction.

KILL OR BE KILLED might, in the past, have been an option for nations considering war. To[day for] nuclear powers that option does not exist. It has changed to KILL AND BE KILLED.

Under your leadership the United States can again become the champion of peace in a more [peaceful] world — of step by step ways to substitute law for force in an interdependent world. We urge you [to take] bold initiatives.

You have spoken of reducing unemployment and of a balanced budget. A billion dollars spent [on the] military produces on the average fewer jobs than if spent on civilian needs. Reducing military co[sts will] improve the chances for peace and free untold billions of dollars for decreasing taxes and more adeq[uately] meeting human needs.

Respectfully,

The Directors and Council of Business Executives Move for New National Priorities

HENRY E. NILES, Chairman
BERNARD S. WEISS, President

BEM (Business Executives Move for New National Priorities). BEM opposes excessive military spending and favors meeting more adequately urgent domestic needs. We believe the present emphasis on military power decreases our nation's true security and undermines its political, economic and social progress.

BEM welcomes new members and contributions to make possible wider dissemination of its views. Contributions are not tax-deductible since most of BEM's activities are directed towards influencing legislation and supporting Members of Congress, regardless of party, who share our views and opposing those who have opposite views.

Do your best shopping with the Food Day feature of The New York Times

If you're looking for better ways to stretch your dollars, let The Times Food Day feature be your guide.

Every Wednesday, these special food pages carry the advertising of many of the big food stores in your area as well as National Brands. They offer you a big selection of best-food buys and plenty of those money-saving coupons.

And remember:
Every Wednesday, Food Day brings Craig Claiborne's weekday food recipes and advice,
Frank J. Prial's "Wine Talk" column, the "Consumer Notes" column and other stories about food.

So for better shopping, eating and entertaining every week, take the time—make the time—to read the Food Day feature.

Every Wednesday in The New York Times
